AMMAN (J.T.) — Mauritania's Foreign Minister Mohammad Ould Lakhal met Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin here and discussed future ties between Mauritania and Israel, official sources quoted by agencies said Saturday. Mr. Lakhal met Mr. Beilin on Friday, said the sources, quoted by the AP and AFP. It was the second meeting Mr. Lakhal held with an Israeli official in two weeks. On June 12, the Mauritanian met Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres in Madrid, Spain. AFP said Foreign Minister Abdul Karim Kabariti took part in the Amman talks. Mr. Lakhal, who began a visit to Amman on Thursday, held talks Saturday with several senior officials including Prime Minister Sharif Zeid Ben Shaker before returning to Mauritania. (see page 3).

King calls for dialogue to end suffering of Iraqi people

Enough is enough, says Monarch in Euronews interview and urges new approach to resolving crisis

'Any lasting solution over Jerusalem should provide for the rights of all three religions'

AMMAN (J.T.) — His Majesty King Hussein has called for an end to the suffering of the Iraqi people through a dialogue that would solve the difficult situation the country faces as a result of international sanctions imposed four years ago.

The King, who is currently visiting London, also said in an interview with Euronews Television that Jerusalem should be kept above all disputes of sovereignty and should be a symbol of peace.

If West Jerusalem is the capital of Israel, then East Jerusalem should be the capital of the Palestinians, said the King.

On Iraq, the King said:

"Iraq is very, very important country. It has a great history and great people. It has a great position within the context of this region and area. I really hope that the suffering of the Iraqi people come to an end before long."

"Iraq must be a vital part of this region," said the King, adding that the country would be eventually restored to its rightful place in the context of the Middle East peace process.

But, as far as the suffering of the people of Iraq is concerned, the King said, "Enough is enough. People have to be given their chance to live as human beings and not to continue to suffer as they really have over so many years...."

In response to a question on the apparent deadlock over American insistence on not easing the sanctions on Iraq as long as the government of President

Saddam Hussein remains in power, the King said:

"What Iraq has been faced with is a very dangerous precedent and I do not think that people will accept" a condition that they remove their leadership as the price for ending the sanctions.

The alternative, the King said, is a "dialogue to get out of this situation and deal with it. And I do not look very happily at the U.N. playing the role of a quarter...that means a (movement) now and then ..."

"I think that enough is enough and that the people of Iraq will not continue to suffer."

The King said Jordan and Israel had come a long way signing their peace treaty in October and expressed hope that peace between people will be the end result of Middle East peace process.

"We have an international boundary with the State of Israel for the first time and

Teenager shot dead in Nablus

NABLUS (Agencies) — Palestinians staged protests in three West Bank towns Saturday and Israeli troops shot dead a Palestinian teenager after he allegedly stabbed an Israeli soldier.

Hundreds of Jewish settlers, meanwhile, blocked a West Bank highway as part of their escalating protest against a planned pullout of Israeli troops from Palestinian towns.

The violence erupted as Israeli and Palestinian negotiators made a final attempt to meet Saturday's deadline for reaching agreement on a West Bank troop redeployment and Palestinian elections.

In protests that may have been fuelled by disappointment over another missed deadline, Palestinians buried stones at Israeli troops in the West Bank towns of Nablus, Jenin and Hebron.

In Nablus, some 600 protesters marched through the streets and threw stones and empty bottles at about 100 soldiers.

Nablus has been tense since three Palestinians were killed by army gunfire in violent street clashes last Sunday.

In Jenin, dozens of Palestinians stoned soldiers during a march in support of Palestinian security detainees held by Israel. The army fired teargas and stun grenades into the crowd and imposed a curfew on the town.

Jenin is the first town to be banded over once redeployment begins.

Stone-throwing protests also erupted in Hebron after Israeli troops shot and killed a 16-year-old Palestinian, Ibrahim Khader Deis. The incident began when the youth stabbed and lightly hurt an Israeli soldier guarding the Jewish enclave of Tel Rameida in the heart of Hebron, according to Israeli reports. Other army guards opened fire, seriously wounding Deis who later died at a Hebron hospital, the reports said.

The settler protest took place along the highway linking Nablus and the Palestinian town of Kalkilya, Israel radio said.

Hundreds of settlers blocked the road Saturday morning, and traffic was backed up for several kilometres. Israeli (Continued on page 7)

Israel-PLO deadline expires without word

EREZ (Agencies) — A July 3 deadline set by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) for an accord on wider Palestinian self-rule passed without announcement of an agreement.

Talks between PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, which began two-and-a-half hours before the midnight deadline, went on into early Sunday morning along the Israel-Gaza border.

Israeli and PLO officials had forecast no agreement would be signed on Saturday for an Israeli troop redeployment in the occupied West Bank and Palestinian elections, both of which are a year behind schedule.

A PLO official said Mr. Peres and Mr. Arafat were likely instead to issue a declaration of principles on redeployment, paving the way for more talks and possible signing of a pact in mid-July.

Israel has cited "security" concerns for the delay in agreeing the details of a pullout from Arab towns in the West Bank.

The PLO has accused Israel of backtracking from an interim self-rule deal signed in 1993 that set up autonomy in Gaza and the West Bank enclave of Jericho in May 1994.

"We are here to narrow gaps. We hope to reach agreement tonight," Mr. Peres told reporters as he waited to greet Mr. Arafat at an Israel-PLO liaison office near the Erez checkpoint.

Mr. Arafat and Mr. Peres were expected to announce after their meeting that intensive negotiations would continue and that they hoped to sign an agreement later this month.

Negotiators have been tackling three issues — a troop pullout from Palestinian population centres, Palestinian elections and the transfer of powers from Israel's military government to the Palestinian autonomy council that is to be elected.

Mr. Peres said earlier Saturday the main problem was to reconcile between Palestinian demands for an extensive pullout and Israel's need to protect the 100,000 Jewish settlers living in the West Bank.

"Many issues have been concluded," Mr. Peres told Israel Radio. "The central problem on which Israel is not budging is the problem of security."

Palestinian Minister of International Cooperation Nabil Shaath concurred that the major disagreement was on the extent of withdrawal.

"There are still gaps between the concepts. We haven't looked at each other's maps yet because we haven't agreed on the concepts," he said after a meeting of Mr. Arafat's cabinet.

Israel Television said Israel had agreed to have troops pulled out of six West Bank towns by the end of the year, or before Palestinian elections. Soldiers would remain in the tense town of Hebron.

However, the Palestinians demand that the Israelis pull back further and that Palestinian police also take control of Arab villages. Israel wants to remain in charge of security in the rural areas.

Cairo to host talks on displaced

CAIRO (AFP) — Israel and Arab states will meet here on Wednesday to discuss the return of Palestinians displaced from their homes in the 1967 Middle East war, Egyptian Deputy Foreign Minister Badr Hamman said. An Arab-Israeli technical commission will meet "to examine the return of Palestinians on the basis of the declaration of principles" signed by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) in September 1993, Mr. Hamman said. The meeting will group Israeli, Palestinian, Egyptian and Jordanian officials, he added.

Arafat says he was targeted for attack

GAZA CITY (AP) — Yasser Arafat told his cabinet ministers Saturday of a plot to assassinate him and two other Arab leaders in Ethiopia, according to a statement issued after the meeting. The statement carried no details, and Mr. Arafat aides were not immediately available for comment. On Monday, there was an attempt on life of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa

Clinton satisfied with results of Israeli-Syrian meetings

CHICAGO (Agencies) — U.S. President Bill Clinton telephoned Syrian President Hafez Al Assad and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on Friday to express satisfaction with military talks between the countries hosted by U.S. officials.

Although the army chiefs of Israel and Syria ended three days of talks on Thursday without agreement on security measures to back up a proposed Israeli withdrawal from the Golan Heights, the White House said Mr. Clinton was satisfied with the outcome of the discussions.

The president called Mr. Assad and Mr. Rabin "to tell them that he was very pleased and satisfied with the meeting with the chiefs of staff." White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn told reporters travelling with the president.

She told reporters the separate telephone conversations were brief but gave no other details.

Mr. Clinton met Thursday at the White House with Syrian Chief of Staff General Hikmat Shehawi and his Israeli counterpart, General Amnon Shahak.

Israel on Friday described the Washington meetings as a small step in the right direction, but lamented the "inflexibility" of Syria.

Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa said there had been no apparent progress in the negotiations, but that the talks would continue.

Speaking after talks with French President Jacques Chirac, Mr. Sharaa refused to comment on the details of the negotiations.

Mr. Sharaa said the Washington negotiations were "serious and conducted in depth. The American involvement was satisfactory," as far as we are concerned.

"There is no apparent result so far, but we cannot prejudge the talks before we assess the whole discussions that have taken place after the return to Damascus of Syrian Chief of Staff General Hikmat Shehawi," Mr. Sharaa said.

Despite the lack of progress, Mr. Sharaa appeared more optimistic on the peace process than in the past during his talks with Mr. Chirac, French sources said.

An official Syrian newspaper said on Saturday the country would not permit Israeli troops to remain on the Golan Heights as part of a peace accord.

The daily Tishreen, in an apparent reference to Israel's demand for the setting up of an Israeli observation point in the Golan Heights, said Damascus would never accept any form of Israeli presence in the plateau.

"Occupation remains occupation whether it covers the whole of the Golan or a small part of it," Tishreen said.

"Syria made it clear in every occasion that it will never cede an atom of its soil and that its sovereignty on the Golan will never be a matter for bargaining or negotiations," it said.

Proposed Syrian-Israeli arrangements include the setting up of early warning systems, demilitarised zones and peacekeeping troops.

Diplomats said Israel wanted to set up an Israeli observation point in the Golan to serve as an early warning post but Damascus rejected the demand and proposed air surveys instead.

Random Serb shells kill 4 in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO (Agencies) — Bosnian Serbs laid heavy shell fire on Sarajevo on Saturday, killing four people including one at the marketplace where one of the city's worst atrocities took place last year.

A shell exploded in the heart of the Bosnian capital's old town 10 metres from the Merkale market where a mortar killed 68 people in February 1994.

Eyewitnesses said the blast left one person dead and at least 10 wounded at the site which has become a symbol of Sarajevo's suffering under three years of siege.

The casualty toll was minimised this time by the absence of the usual crowd of Saturday shoppers as Sarajevo's civilian population took shelter from mortars and shells fired by the besieging Serbs.

The barrage killed three other people and wounded dozens more elsewhere in the city which has suffered heavy casualties since a U.N. ban on heavy weapons collapsed a month ago.

"It seems (the shelling) is becoming more random," said U.N. spokesman Gary Coward. "This was blatant firing into the city."

In another sign of combatant's growing antagonism towards U.N. peacekeepers accused Serbs of conducting deliberate and coordinated attacks on four U.N. faci-ties. Among them was the main U.N. communications centre and French peacekeeping headquarters, which were hit by two mortars on Thursday. U.N. observation posts and camps elsewhere in and around the city were targeted with rifle-grenades and small arms fire, U.N. officials said.

"It is more than likely to our view that these attacks were direct and deliberate targeting of U.N. facilities and personnel," said spokesman Coward. The intent "could have been to kill (or) it could have been to send a message."

Serb shelling of the besieged city has increased since the Muslim-led government army launched an offensive June 15.

On Friday, Colonel Coward had implied that the mortar hits were inadvertent. He appealed to the government to stop using weapons located near the compound, charging the attacks were drawing Serb fire. The building serves both as the U.N. command and headquarters for the French contingent, the largest of the multinational force.

Less than two hours after Col. Coward spoke, another three shells landed close to the building, though the compound took no direct hits.

Sudan takes Egypt to U.N.

SUDAN ON Saturday complained to the U.N. Security Council about Egyptian attacks in a disputed border region, the official Sudanese news agency said. It also called on the world body to resolve the long running dispute over the Halaib region on the Red Sea.

The Sudanese ambassador to the United Nations filed the complaint with the council after Sudan said two of its policemen and a soldier were killed in skirmishes in the disputed Halaib region this week.

Sudan said in the complaint that on Tuesday the Egyptian army attacked Sudanese police in the region, killing one and injuring seven others, the news agency SUNA said.

The army "continued its escalations and aggression and attacked a coastal station north of Halaib (town), killing a Sudanese policeman and injuring another," it said.

Court hears three more witnesses in 'Arab Afghan' case

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Two witnesses told the State Security Court on Saturday that nearly $4,500 sent to their joint banking account here by Saudi Mohammed Khalifa were mainly intended and spent for air passages for Islamic teachers to be sent abroad and had no links with subversion in Jordan.

The testimonies, supported by records of the account and authenticated by the manager of the bank who also appeared in court, appeared to back Mr. Khalifa's argument that he was only a philanthropist interested in spreading Islamic education and was not linked to extremism.

The witnesses appeared in the State Security Court in response to summons by the tribunal which is reviewing its verdicts issued in December after a four-month trial of the so-called Arab Afghan case — a reference to the purported links of some of the defendants with Arab volunteers who fought in the Afghan war.

In its Dec. 16 verdict, the court sentenced 11 to death — including Mr. Khalifa and two others in absentia — and handed down to seven others stiff jail terms after finding them guilty of carrying out and plotting bomb attacks at public places and subversive acts to destabilise Jordan.

The review of the verdicts was ordered in April by the Court of Cassation, which makes mandatory consideration of all State Security Court rulings. The Court of Cassation said the State Security Court should take into consideration the testimonies of three witnesses — one security officer and two civilians — and review the verdicts.

Mr. Khalifa is undergoing a retrial after he surrendered in May in line with a provision that qualifies anyone sentenced in absentia in Jordan for a retrial if he or she surrenders/is arrested by Jordanian authorities. The other two sentenced in absentia — a Jordanian and an Omani — remain fugitive and the verdicts against them remain valid.

In Saturday's 90-minute hearing, Omar Diab, who taught at a religious school run by Mr. Khalifa in the Philippines for nearly 20 months in 1992 and 1993, testified that he used to transfer all his earnings — $500 per month — to a joint account with his sister Khalidiyeh at the Islamic Bank branch in Beqaa. All his living expenses in the Philippines were paid for by the school, he said.

The statement account showed a $4,496 transfer in mid-1993. The witness explained that part of the transfer represented his own earnings and the rest was given by Mr. Khalifa to be spent on paying the air ticket for two religious teachers to go to Russia and for Abdullah Hashaika, the first defendant in the case, to travel to the Philippines to work at Mr. Khalifa's school.

(The defence says that Mr. Khalifa represented Islamic charities in Saudi Arabia and was organising Koranic and Arabic-language schools and teachers around the world.) Mr. Hashaika was paid $1,000 by the witness's sister, who told the court that she did not know the man and had handed over the money at her doorstep when he called on her to collect it.

Both witnesses said no part of funds from the account was spent for any other purpose. Mr. Diab returned to Jordan when Mr. Hashaika replaced him in the Philippines.

The case against Mr. Khalifa stemmed from a statement that Mr. Hashaika made to interrogators that the Saudi had promised to finance a subversive group in Jordan during a meeting in the Philippines while he (Hashaika) taught at Mr. Khalifa's religious school.

Mr. Khalifa denies the charges and argues that all his dealings with Mr. Hashaika were related to the latter's work at the school.

The court set its next session for Wednesday, when it will hear a behaviour report on one of the other defendants who, according to the Court of Cassation, should have been treated as a minor since he was under 18 when the verdict was issued. The report will come from the prison where he is being held.

At Wednesday's session, the court is expected to conclude the hearings and set a date for its ruling.

Behind Mubarak adulation, Egypt's problems remain

CAIRO (AP) — Turn on the television, any channel, there's Hosni Mubarak waving to crowds, being hugged by peasants, raising the Egyptian flag, explaining how he stayed cool even as assassins' bullets whizzed by.

The adulation of the Egyptian president reached its height Thursday — four days after the assassination attempt in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia — when he appeared before thousands of banner-waving workers celebrating his survival.

For many, the relief was sincere. But others saw the barrage of TV images as an attempt to bolster Mr. Mubarak while distracting from Egypt's woes.

Mr. Mubarak faces gripes about rising prices and up to 20 per cent unemployment, charges he has tried to stifle criticism of the government, and complaints that he wants to keep opposition candidates from running in this fall's parliamentary elections.

Human rights groups also charge the government's battle with Muslim militants — who are blamed for trying to kill the president Monday during his trip to Ethiopia — has led to mass arrests, torture and summary executions.

"If things continue along this road, one day there is going to be an explosion," said Adel Hussein, the former editor of the Islamic bi-weekly newspaper Al Shaab.

Mr. Hussein was one of those journalists who wound up in jail after writing persistent articles critical of the government.

He was held for about three weeks, accused of possessing anti-government pamphlets — found on an airplane seat he occupied — and of revealing military secrets in a newspaper article.

No charges were ever brought. He denied he ever had the pamphlets and said the supposed secrets had already been written about in other newspapers.

Mr. Hussein, who suffers from ulcers and heart trouble, said he was kept in a dank, windowless cell. But his complaints pale before other criticism of Egypt's security services.

In a report issued in May, the Egyptian Organisation for Human Rights charged that police have shot 38 people while in custody and routinely jail members of suspects' families to force their relatives to surrender.

The organisation said 10,000 people were in jail as suspected Muslim militants, many without charges, and that torture was used often during interrogations and in prisons.

The government denies such charges.

In a way, the 67-year-old Mubarak is a victim of his own efforts to open up Egyptian society. He came to power in 1981 after Muslim extremists gunned down his predecessor, Anwar Sadat, for signing a peace treaty with Israel.

When first in office, Mr. Mubarak's benign face and booming laugh gained him the nickname "the laughing cow," after the French cheese "La vache qui rit." Later, when he succeeded in improving Egypt's telephone system, electricity and bridges, he was known as "Hosni Kabari," or "Hosni of the Bridges."

Lately, his militant opponents have called him "Mubarak the Pharaoh," implying he is like the absolute rulers of ancient times.

The nicknames show the full sweep of Mr. Mubarak's rule. The opposition press is livelier now than ever before. The human rights organisations criticising him were not allowed to exist before he came to power.

But the press law his government recently adopted, which it had to amend after criticism, raised penalties for defaming state institutions to up to five years — from three months.

Mohammad Sid Ahmad, a leftist writer, said that even though the government was forced to back down, trying to put restrictions on the media undercuts democracy.

Mr. Mubarak is in his third six-year term. In the past, holding on to power too long has led Egyptian leaders to brutally oppress their political opponents.

Already, some Egyptians are noting the similarity between this week's celebrations of Mr. Mubarak and the elaborate ceremonies that Sadat staged to dramatise his own importance.

"I hope these rallies won't go to his head," said sociologist Sadeedaddin Ibrahim, a professor at the American University in Cairo, "that he will continue to be modest and show humility."

Arafat — a would-be statesman seeks state

GAZA CITY (AFP) — A year after arriving in Gaza to a hero's welcome Yasser Arafat has juggled a multitude of problems and managed to keep the fragile peace process alive but is far from creating a Palestinian state.

Ecstatic scenes greeted Mr. Arafat, when dressed in his familiar military fatigues and scarf or keffiyeh, he stepped onto Palestinian soil on July 1, 1994, ending a 27 year exile.

He carried with him the hopes and dreams of two million Palestinians living in the Gaza Strip and West Bank, desperate to end decades of Israeli occupation.

But the honeymoon period was soon over. Since then the long-time revolutionary has had to confront the hardline Islamic groups opposed to the peace process with Israel, regular closures of borders of the Palestinian territories which have thrown thousands out of work, and the slow dribble of international aid.

In November increasing disillusion erupted into the first serious clashes between Palestinian policemen and militants which left 13 dead in Gaza City.

But 12 months on Mr. Arafat is on the verge of a deal with Israel on the next phase of Palestinian self-rule, including a withdrawal of Israeli troops on the West Bank and elections.

New buildings are springing up in Gaza and he has succeeded in clamping down on the extremists.

The crowning achievement was in December, when the once reviled "terrorist," stood with Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres to receive the Nobel Peace Prize.

Now a regular guest in many Western capitals, Mr. Arafat has begun to adopt the mantle of a statesman more quickly than many thought.

"Things are now definitely going in the right direction," Terje Larsen, the U.N. representative to the territories told AFP.

"I would say that Mr. Arafat has performed more than well," he said, adding that the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) leader had "learned fast."

"There is also a cultural revolution which is the most radical change. The skirts are going up and the veils are going back. You can even catch glimpses of couples walking hand in hand. This has a tremendous political effect. This signifies fundamentalism being pushed back."

"There is a restoration of hope... growing support for the Palestinian experiment," he added.

A poll in mid-June found three-quarters of Palestinians support the continuing peace process with Israel.

But human rights groups have denounced Mr. Arafat for setting up a special military court which has dispensed quick justice — with "no appeal" — to about 10 militants.

Hardliners have accused him of selling out the Palestinian cause for "nothing" in return.

"The goals of independence and sovereignty that the PLO leader set have not been achieved," said Imad Falaj, editor-in-chief of Al-Wakeel, the mouthpiece of the Islamic Resistance Movement, Hamas.

"He has failed to reach an understanding with the opposition and the spectre of a civil war stalks Gaza. The prisoners have not been freed, the settlements have not been dismantled and, despite everything Mr. Arafat continues the political process with Israel," he added.

Others have criticised his autocratic leadership and corruption within his administration.

"He's the only one who can take decisions. He has to sign everything — even the order for telephone lines, because they discovered corruption," said his Israeli biographer Danny Rubinstein.

"Arafat is adopting the Arabic system of rule. But he's not cruel and he's not tyrannical. He's even more democratic than most Arab regimes."

"Above all, he's arrived, which is already quite an achievement. He's managed to stay alive and he's stayed the leader."

But he added that the PLO leader, who at 64 is expecting soon to be a father for the first time, had maybe had his day.

"Like Moses he brought people to the promised land, but he will never create the state. The Palestinians need someone who is a creator, not a revolutionary."

Moroccan women seek laws against violence

CASABLANCA (R) — A Moroccan women's lobby demanded new laws to protect women from domestic violence and harassment and the repeal of statutes that are discriminatory.

"There should be a law defining violence which can be physical, sexual, as well as mental and ways of proving such violence," lawyer Saadia Wadiah told a women's conference in Casablanca on Friday.

The conference gave no figures for domestic violence but lawyers say the practice is widespread in Morocco's patriarchal society where 75 per cent of women are illiterate.

One of the speakers recalled a recent case where a wife was beaten to death by her husband. Sentencing is usually lenient in cases of domestic violence.

The one-day conference on the theme of "Violence against Women" was organised by the Moroccan Association for Human Rights for Women (AMDF).

It dealt with sexual harassment, discrimination and domestic violence and called for the repeal of all laws which discriminate against women in the home and in the workplace.

"Civic laws are particularly unjust to women," said AMDF President Najat Razi. She noted that a woman could not marry without permission from a male relative.

"Women are still seen as children needing guidance," she said.

Divorce and child custody laws also discriminated against women, the conference heard.

"Only men can take the decision to divorce without giving their wives prior warning. This law should be abolished as well as the law allowing polygamy which is unacceptable in a society where women work and are financially independent," Ms. Wadiah said.

Speakers said new laws should take into consideration that violence could also take the form of sexual harassment.

Turkish general attacks democratic reforms as damaging war on PKK

ANKARA (R) — One of Turkey's top generals has condemned government efforts to further democracy as called for by the West, saying it was undermining the army's fight with Kurdish separatist rebels. Turkish newspapers said on Saturday.

"We'll finish terrorism soon but we're being held back by democracy and human rights," the Yeni Yuzul daily quoted armed forces Deputy Chief General Ahmet Corekci as telling a briefing of Turkish journalists at the general staff headquarters.

Several dailies said Gen. Corekci criticised an attempt by the coalition government of Prime Minister Tansu Ciller to scrap the anti-terrorism law's Article 8, which restricts freedom of expression.

The article has been used to jail scores of writers on grounds of their perceived support for Kurdish separatism and is a focus of Western criticism of Turkey's human rights records.

"We want Article 8 to stay as it is while the fight against terrorism is going on. Changing it is not appropriate," Gen. Corekci was quoted as telling the briefing, to which foreign journalists were not invited.

Military spokesman were not available for comment later.

Western human rights groups accuse the Turkish military of burning villages in its fight against Kurdish rebels, torture and other violations.

The European Parliament has conditioned Turkey's entry into a customs union with the European Union on Ankara carrying out democratic reforms.

Despite his criticism, Gen. Corekci said the armed forces would not go against any decision by parliament to scrap or change Article 8 under European pressure.

"We couldn't say anything if parliament decided to change it in Turkey's higher interests for reasons like the customs union," he told the journalists.

The army and government have repeatedly said Turkey is on the point of defeating the Kurdish Labour Party (PKK) guerrilla group, which fights for Kurdish autonomy or independence in the southeast.

Western analysts say more than 17,000 people have been killed in the guerrillas' 11-year-old campaign but Mr. Ciller's office last week put the death toll at nearly 20,000.

President Suleyman Demirel, ousted as prime minister by the army in 1970 and 1980, played down Gen. Corekci's comments. Anatolian news agency said.

"Don't read too much into this," he told the agency in Bucharest where he was attending a Black Sea leaders summit.

"He's not saying the army is treading on human rights. He's saying it has problems because it is not treading on human rights," Mr. Demirel said.

The armed forces ruled Turkey for three years after the 1980 takeover, quelling political violence before handing power back to civilians.

Gen. Corekci said Kurdish demands for the lifting of bans on Kurdish language education in schools and Kurdish broadcasting were the first steps to separatism.

"It's a salami tactic, the more you cut the more they want," he said. "They have political and cultural demands. Writing, travelling, drawing, speaking, broadcasting, special education. We can't consent to that," he was quoted as saying.

Successive governments have rejected any political solution to the Kurdish problem and largely given the military a free hand to fight the PKK.

Amendments are set back

The quest to liberalise the Turkish constitution inherited from the last military regime encountered difficulties Friday during a debate in parliament.

None of the proposed amendments during the first reading attained the necessary two-thirds majority required for an automatic modification of the country's basic law.

The failure was a blow to Prime Minister Ciller, who had been anticipating success.

A second reading will be held beginning Tuesday on Wednesday.

A reform needs 300 votes to be passed automatically. If it gets between 270 and 300 a referendum is necessary.

The push for reform envisages the amendment of around 20 articles of a constitution published in 1982 under the military regime from the 1980 coup d'etat.

Reformers want trade union rights extended to civil servants and to permit trade unions and associations to have their own constitutions. They also want to lower the age of the right to vote. However, the reforms do not include any measure about the freedom of expression, desired by advocates of democracy and also by Western countries pushing for liberalisation in Turkey.

Legislators accepted only seven amendments in the first reading, rejecting another 15 and passing two for the bill stage.

But even the seven approved articles did not receive the 300 votes that would mean they avoiding a referendum, plunging the debate into difficulties from the outset.

Delegates urge more assistance to Palestinian educational needs

AMMAN (Petra) — At the end of week-long meeting here Saturday by Arab states on the subject of education in Palestinian self rule areas and occupied lands, a statement summing up the recommendations called on Arab League member states to provide a $20 million fund to cover the cost of educational programmes inside the Palestinian lands.

The discussions at the meetings centred on the extension of assistance in education to Palestinians in the self rule areas and the occupied territories.

During the meeting the participants made several recommendations concerning academic, vocational and educational programmes which are broadcast on radio and television from Arab states to students in the self-rule areas and occupied lands.

The delegates representing Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and Egypt in addition to Palestine and the Arab League requested that the Palestinian delegation provide the Arab League with a list of high priority technical and administrative needs in education to enable these countries in turn to work towards specific goals.

The delegates also called for the provision of a detailed report concerning Israeli incidences of malpractice against Palestinian educational institutions.

They urged the Arab League secretariat to maintain close contact with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) and to continue to hold discussions that centre on educational issues and that aim to provide assistance to Palestinian educational programmes and institutions.

Also on the agenda was the call for Arab countries to continue granting seats and scholarships to eligible Palestinian students at their universities.

The delegates discussed the general vocational training situation in Palestinian lands and again requested that the Palestinian delegation submit a report on vocational education and the type of assistance required in that area.

They asked the Arab League to press the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) to expand its existing vocational training facilities.

Those recommendations, the delegates said, will be submitted to the general conference of supervisors of Palestinian affairs who will hold a meeting in Cairo later this month.

Mauritanian minister ends official visit, affirms country's support for peace process

AMMAN (Petra) — Visiting Mauritanian Foreign Minister, Mohammad Ould Lakhall, Saturday met with His Royal Highness Prince Abdullah, the Regent, and Prime Minister Sharif Zeid Ben Shaker to express his country's support for the Middle East peace process.

The Mauritanian minister said his country greatly appreciates His Majesty King Hussein's endeavours for peace and for serving the Arab nation.

In welcoming Mr. Lakhall, Prince Abdullah said that King Hussein was pursuing all efforts to bolster inter-Arab relations.

At an earlier meeting with the Prime Minister, Mr. Lakhall discussed issues of common concern and commended the Kingdom's efforts in ending inter-Arab differences.

Mr. Lakhall, who arrived in Amman Thursday evening, met separately with Foreign Minister Abdul Karim Kabari and discussed the prospect of holding meetings by officials from the two countries to pave the ground for joint agreements in trade, economic and cultural fields.

These agreements could be concluded during a visit by Mr. Kabari to Mauritania at a later date.

The two ministers reviewed pan-Arab, regional and international issues of common interest and the latest developments in the peace process.

They expressed continued backing to the peace process based on international legitimacy and U. N. Security Council resolutions and their backing for the Oslo and Cairo agreements between Israel and the Palestine National Authority (PNA).

The two ministers also discussed ways of ending inter-Arab differences and discussed the situation in Bosnia.

After the meetings Mr. Lakhall left Amman and was seen off by Mr. Kabari and other officials.

France, Jordan look into possibility of financing of water pipeline in the north

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — France and Jordan are discussing possibilities of financing for a pipeline project that would help pump drinking water from northern sources to Amman and dramatically improve the availability of potable water in the capital.

The project involves laying 65 kilometres of pipes from near the Yarmouk River in the north alongside the King Abdullah Canal to a main station at Deir Alla, from where the water will be pumped to Amman through an existing pipeline.

The estimated cost of the project is about $40 million.

French Ambassador to Jordan Bernard Bajolet said Thursday the two governments were discussing financing for the project, but no definite figures were agreed upon yet.

The pipeline will have an annual pumping capacity of 45 million cubic metres in the first stage and 60 million cubic metres in the second stage.

It will be connected to a pipeline that started bringing water from Israel's Lake Tiberias to the King Abdullah Canal last month.

The pipeline is seen key to increasing the availability of drinking water to Amman and its suburbs, which are already facing a shortage and where the demand is expected to grow dramatically over the next few years.

Mr. Bajolet said French financing for the project, as and when it materialises, will be part of Paris' economic assistance to Jordan.

"The precise components of the financing, what part of it will be in aid and what part will be in concessionary loans, have not been determined yet, but we hope to arrive at an agreement soon," he told a press conference marking the end of the French presidency of the European Union (EU).

An EU diplomat said meanwhile that work was continuing swiftly on conducting feasibility studies on water projects included in the Jordan-Israel peace treaty signed on Oct. 26. The studies do not include the pipeline.

"The studies on the Jordanian-Israeli projects will be in two stages," said the diplomat. "The first stage will involve sending experts to actual site of the proposed projects for first-hand information on the terrain and features of the land and the second stage will involve detailed reviews of the technical aspects of the projects."

The projects involve two dams and diversion structures on the rivers Yarmouk and Jordan and a desalination plant in Israeli territory.

The Lake Tiberias-King Abdullah Canal pipeline, which will bring in 30 million cubic metres of water every year, is one of the projects mentioned in the peace treaty.

The $5 million pipeline, financed by Jordan, runs 2.2 kilometres in Israeli territory and 1.1 kilometre in Jordanian land.

The EU is financing the feasibility studies on the dam and desalination plant projects with a grant of 11 million European currency units (ECUs), about $14 million.

The European Commission, the executive arm of the 15-member EU, is coordinating the studies, which are expected to be completed in 1996.

Subject to the finding of the feasibility studies, "which we are sure will be positive," the EU, along with other countries, will consider financing for the project, German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said during a visit to Jordan last month.

Germany, whose contribution accounts for 28 per cent of the overall EU budget, is also expected to extend bilateral assistance to the projects.

CAMP SEASON

Minister of Youth Awad Khleifat Saturday attended a school ceremony in the Shafa Badran district marking the start of a three-week programme for youth organised by the ministry in cooperation with several other departments and the Jordan Armed Forces. A total of 7,500 youths from governorates around the Kingdom are involved in the programme entitled: Construction and Work Camps. The youths will carry out activities at 24 locations. Their chores will include maintenance work, clean up activities and tree planting. The young volunteers will also attend lectures.

Consumer protection societies meet to compare provisions and measures

AMMAN (Petra) — A team from the Consumers Protection Society (CPS) in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) met in Amman Saturday with Health Minister Aref Batayneh and the president of the Jordanian Consumers Protection Society (JCPS) Mohammad Obaidat to discuss the aims and activities of their organisations.

The head of the UAE team, Mohammad Jassem, summarised his society's activities and measures for providing protection to consumers.

Dr. Batayneh explained his ministry's measures of controlling food supplies entering Jordan. He said such measures include laboratory tests conducted on food samples and inspection tours of food storage houses by health authorities.

He said that the ministry maintains close cooperation with other government departments to ensure that all foodstuffs respond to specifications and standards accepted in Jordan.

In his report, the role of the JCPS in providing the public with consumer information was also outlined.

Dr. Batayneh was presented with a shield by Mr. Jassem in recognition of his efforts in the area of health.

Later the UAE team called at the Royal Scientific Society (RSS) and met with its vice president, Saeed Alloush who spoke of the development and activities of various departments in the RSS, as well as the technical advice they offer to the Jordanian public and private organisations.

Dr. Alloush expressed the willingness of the RSS to cooperate with the UAE society in matters concerning consumer protection.

Serbs shell Sarajevo at random

The Serbs on Friday denied shelling the U.N. facilities.

Tension over the U.N. mission in former Yugoslavia have soared in recent days with both the government and rebel Serbs lashing out at the peacekeeping force.

The government on Friday said it would no longer deal with the U.N.'s top envoy, after asking the Security Council to review the peacekeeping mission.

The Serbs meanwhile responded with anger to a German Parliament vote Friday to send fighter jets to Bosnia to protect a rapid reaction force that is supposed to bolster the flagging U.N. mission.

Their arrival will be tantamount to a military occupation," Bosnian Serb Television said, recalling the harsh Nazi invasion of the Balkans. "Sending German soldiers is like putting out a fire with petrol."

The foreign ministry of Serb-led Yugoslavia on Saturday also expressed "serious concern" over the German decision.

"It is neither wise nor useful that Germany should again find herself in a military role in the Balkans, even under the wing of the United Nations peace forces," the ministry statement said.

Government and Serb troops battled around the Serb-held southwestern Sarajevo suburb of Nedzarici, which borders the U.N.-controlled airport.

Fighting was also reported around a village further to the southwest. Bosnian Serbs said three civilians were wounded in Serb-held suburbs.

U.N. spokesman Major Guy Vinet said the Serbs may have gained some ground in a western suburb on Friday.

U.N. officials, who have been barred from front lines, are limited in their ability to confirm battlefield movements.

On Friday, battles were focused around a village just north of Sarajevo, where U.N. officials said it appeared government forces outside the city had advanced four kilometres in the past two weeks.

In Copenhagen, U.S. Defence Secretary William Perry categorically denied that Washington had ever provided arms to the Bosnian government.

"We are not providing weapons to the Bosnian government, now or ever," Mr. Perry told reporters on the second day of his visit to Denmark, denying an allegation by a top French civil servant quoted in the Danish press on Saturday.

"The French official, unnamed, is simply wrong. Either he is misinformed or he is deliberately fabricating a story," said Mr. Perry.

"We have indeed regular discussions, consultations with the Bosnian government. We have an ambassador in Sarajevo, but regarding the question of providing arms to the Bosnians, the answer is categorically no."

The Director and Staff of The Jordan Information Bureau in Washington, D.C. mourn the passing away of their friend Mona Saket Rifai wife of their colleague, Dr. Taleb Rifai. May her soul rest in peace. Our hearts and thoughts are with the Rifai and Saket families.

Pacific anti-nuclear protests rage on against France

PAPEETE, Tahiti (R) — The capital of the island of Tahiti was thrown into chaos for a second day as thousands protesting against the resumption of French nuclear tests in the South Pacific blocked its main roads.

French radio said there were also protests in Noumea, the capital of French-controlled New Caledonia off the east coast of Australia, where some 2,000 people demonstrated peacefully.

The blockade at Papeete started Thursday as the Rainbow Warrior II, flagship of the environmental lobby group Greenpeace, sailed into the port.

Refused permission to dock at the main quay, Quai d'Honneur, the ship remained in the harbour for 24 hours before tying up at a temporary anchorage in the middle of Papeete Harbour.

Greenpeace campaign leader Stephanie Mills said she had been told the ship was not allowed to dock for security reasons.

Ms. Mills and another crew member have been told they will be deported immediately they go ashore, as they are banned persons, having been deported in 1992 after a previous protest voyage.

French authorities have said they may invite Greenpeace representatives to visit the Mururoa Atoll, where France is due to carry out a final series of eight underground nuclear blasts.

But Ms. Mills told a news conference on board the Rainbow Warrior that the group had received no such invitation and if they did it would be refused.

Two previous invitations to visit Mururoa in 1989 and 1992 came to nothing as authorities rejected Greenpeace's conditions.

The demonstration organisers estimated that 15,000 Tahitians had converged on Papeete from all directions for the start of the protest Thursday.

"It is a mood of retribution, anger, revenge, outrage and indignation," said Oscar Temara, leader of the Liberation Front of Polynesia, a French Polynesia's main independence group. "That is what you see today."

A protest delegation delivered a letter, addressed to French President Jacques Chirac, to the French high commissioner demanding a local referendum on the resumption of testing.

Mr. Chirac's approval of eight nuclear tests at Mururoa Atoll between September and May, 1996, has angered Tahitians fearful of radiation contamination. The announcement has also put new vigour into French Polynesia's independence movement.

France is the South Pacific's last colonial power and controls three territories, French Polynesia, New Caledonia and Wallis and Futuna Islands.

Greenpeace hopes to help organise further actions with local anti-nuclear protesters and church leaders over the weekend.

Atlantis-Mir crew celebrate linkup

SPACE CENTRE, Houston (AP) — The crew of the newly created Atlantis-Mir spaceship exchanged gifts and joined two halves of a medalion to celebrate "the linking of ideas, wills, people."

But first, officials got into the act.

U.S. Vice President Al Gore and Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, meeting in Moscow this week, congratulated the astronauts and cosmonauts who had crowded into the Mir core module. For the occasion, Russian and American flags were hung as a backdrop.

"It's great to see our two great flags side-by-side there in orbit above the Earth," Mr. Gore said.

"Two years ago we began to work on this joint project," Mr. Chernomyrdin said. "We now see the results of this work and it is great to see a 220-tonne complex flying in orbit the way you are."

Joined by a 1-metre-long (3-foot-long) pressurised tunnel in their docking Thursday, the shuttle Atlantis and the space station Mir formed the largest manmade satellite ever to orbit the Earth. It was a forerunner of an international outpost expected to have a permanent place in space by the turn of the century.

"It is very pleasant to look at it," said cosmonaut Anatoly Soloviyev, who hitched a ride on the shuttle in take command of the permanently orbiting Mir.

"This docking has laid a foundation for work in the new programme," he said of joint space endeavours planned by the United States and Russia.

"It is not only a mechanical docking but also a linking of ideas, wills, peoples in order to form a very great scientific programme," Soloviyev said.

In the final analysis, this is done only to obtain significant results in orbit so humankind on Earth can live better and receive the interesting and great scientific results that are forthcoming.

Later in the day, the serious work of gauging the effects of prolonged space flight began in earnest as astronaut-physician Ellen Baker collected fluid samples from the two Russians and one American who had been on Mir nearly four months.

The vials of blood, saliva and urine will be in the shuttle freezer for the return to Earth, along with samples collected over time aboard Mir.

The shuttle crew also was troubleshooting an apparent hardware problem with one of five computers. Mission control said loss of the computer would have no impact on the mission.

In the gift exchange, the space travellers unwrapped presents one by one.

White carnations from Shuttle Commander Robert Gibson for the three men who had been in Mir for 105 days-watches for the Atlantis crew from Vladimir Dezhnev, outgoing commander of the Mir whose 33rd birthday is Friday.

The crews then followed the tradition set during the only other spacecraft merger, the Apollo-Soyuz linkup of 20 years ago, and joined two halves of a medalion the size of a salad plate.

And they ceremoniously put together models of the Atlantis and the Mir into the configuration in which they are flying.

The formal gift exchange ceremony was an anticlimax because the crews had already sealed Thursday's docking with hugs, kisses, handshakes and the traditional Russian salt-and-bread welcome.

Venice begins tourist-only ferries

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Same canal, different boats. That's the plan this summer for residents and tourists in an attempt to ease crowding aboard the barge-like motor vessels used as public transportation. Beginning Saturday, Venetians and visitors will have different boarding points for the boats, or "vaporetti," on two of the busiest routes: To the Rialto Bridge area in the centre of Venice and Piazzale Roma, at the end of the causeway from the mainland. The change, which remains in effect until September, is intended to provide less-crowded boats for residents who rely on the vessels every day, transportation officials said. Service in other parts of the canal-laced city should not be affected. It is the second recent change in operations on the canals. Earlier this month, four motor-powered gondolas were approved because of waves caused by heavy boat traffic on the main canals.

You're a man doctors tell married woman

BEIJING (R) — Doctors in China's central Hunan province have told a 26-year-old married woman she is actually a man with a rare genetic disorder, the Xinhua News Agency said Friday. Li sought doctors at the Hunan Medical University earlier this month because she had no menses and could not conceive, the agency said. The doctors discovered that, according to Li's chromosomes make-up, she was actually male, though a missing gene caused her to appear female, it said. Li is the first such known case in China, it said. Xinhua quoted experts as saying Li's female features were not pronounced and that her uterus resembled that of a five-year-old. Doctors are treating Li with the female hormone Estrogen, it said.

Surgeon blames botched surgery for having wrong patient

NEW YORK (AP) — A prominent brain surgeon says he accidentally operated on the healthy side of the brain of the mother of India's top film star because he had the wrong patient. "Though this was a terrible tragedy, it was a result of miscommunication, not careless surgery," Ehud Arbib said in a statement given to New York Newsday by his lawyer, David Hoffman. The surgery last month at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Centre was on the healthy right temporal brain lobe of Rajeswar Ayyappan, mother of Indian film star Sridevi. Mrs. Ayyappan had flown to the cancer for surgery on a malignant tumour on the opposite temporal lobe. Mrs. Ayyappan, 59, later had the correct surgery at New York Hospital, where she is in stable condition and receiving radiation treatments. Dr. Arbib has since been suspended from performing surgery at Memorial Sloan-Kettering. Mr. Hoffman said the mixup started on May 25, when Mrs. Ayyappan first arrived in New York. She had been referred to a colleague of Dr. Arbib who was unable to treat her and sent the case to Dr. Arbib. Mr. Hoffman told Newsday, his attorney says Dr. Arbib did not know Mrs. Ayyappan had been referred to him. Shortly before Mr. Ayyappan came to New York, another colleague of Dr. Arbib had asked him to examine a patient from India, hospital sources told Newsday. The paper said that man's last name is "Gupta." The film showed Mrs. Gupta had a malignant brain tumour of the right temporal lobe. But Dr. Arbib advised his colleague to tell Mr. Gupta not to come to New York because the tumour was so far advanced, the paper said. On May 25, when Mrs. Ayyappan and her family went to Dr. Arbib's office at the hospital, someone on the doctor's staff told him "the patient from India" had arrived. Mr. Hoffman told Newsday, Dr. Arbib then met with Mrs. Ayyappan, her doctor from India and her family. Mr. Hoffman said Dr. Arbib asked his Indian visitors: "Are you the (Gupta) family?" "They all nodded and said, yes, they were," Mr. Hoffman said. "We just can't explain why they did that."

Landslide claims 20 lives in Malaysia

KUALA LUMPUR (R) — At least 20 people were killed when a landslide swept vehicles off a mountain road in pouring rain as they drove to a casino in Malaysia's popular genting highlands resort, police said Saturday.

A wall of mud, uprooted trees, boulders and water swept down a hillside Friday on the road that winds up to the casino, 75 kilometres north of Kuala Lumpur. It buried at least 15 vehicles, police and rescue officials said.

A Japanese, a Filipino and a five-month-old baby were among the dead in one of Malaysia's worst landslide disasters. Officials said the death toll stood at 20 by mid-afternoon on Saturday. Earlier they said 21 people had died.

Another 23 people were taken to hospital with injuries, 16 of them serious, hospital officials said.

The search for victims continued Saturday evening more than 24 hours after the landslide.

Some survivors had been travelling in a bus when a minor landslide occurred and they were forced to get out and walk.

As they were walking down the road, the first of two major landslides roared down, sweeping the driver and his 30 passengers with it, rescue workers said.

Some scrambled to safety or were pulled out by the rescuers, others were buried alive.

The second slide caused part of the road to collapse into a 70-metre-deep (230-foot-deep) ravine, dragging along four cars and several people who had abandoned their vehicles.

China postpones talks with Taiwan

BEIJING (R) — China Saturday postponed scheduled talks with arch-rival Taiwan, punishing the island for "a series of wrong-doings" linked to its attempts to break out of diplomatic isolation.

The Association for Relations Across the Taiwan Straits has suggested postponing routine talks with its Taiwan counterpart, the Straits Exchange Foundation, the Xinhua News Agency said.

The association and the foundation are semi-official organisations that handle bilateral relations to skirt a decades-old ban by Taipei on official contact.

"It is appropriate to postpone routine talks between leaders of the two non-governmental organisations since a series of doings by the Taiwan authorities have severely damaged the basis for stabilising and developing cross-strait relations," an association official was quoted as saying.

The association and foundation secretaries-general were scheduled to hold routine talks once every three months or in July.

It was the second time in two weeks that the association had put off talks with its Taiwan counterpart.

Last month, China postponed high-level talks between the chairmen of the association and the foundation, also slated for July.

Analysts said the Chinese move to postpone routine talks was meant as a punishment because Taiwan was more eager than China to resolve a series of problems at the talks, such as fishing disputes.

Uneasy relations between Beijing and Taipei, rivals since the end of the Chinese Civil War in 1949, have been strained by President Lee Teng-hui's visit to the United States in June.

Beijing, which considers Taiwan a rebel province, has sought to isolate the island diplomatically. Only 29 countries recognise Taiwan.

Hair expert ties Simpson to murder scene

LOS ANGELES (R) — Hair expert Doug Deedrick also said hair similar to Ronald Goldman's was found on the right-hand glove, discovered at the football great's home the morning after the June 12, 1994, murder. The left glove was found at the murder scene outside Nicole Simpson's luxury condominium, two miles (three-km) away.

Mr. Deedrick also said hair similar to that on Simpson's head was found on Goldman's shirt and hair from Simpson's hairbrush was found on Goldman's shirt and in the right glove. Head hair similar to that of Simpson and his ex-wife was also found on the knit watch cap recovered from the murder scene, he said.

Simpson, a popular sportscaster and TV pitchman after his football career, has pleaded not guilty to the murders.

Mr. Deedrick was ordered by Judge Lance Ito not to use the word "match" when describing the similarity between the hairs after the expert had explained that hair and fiber analysis was an inexact science. Instead, Mr. Deedrick limited himself to saying the evidence hair "exhibited the same microscopic characteristics" as known hair samples from the victims.

He said the hair found on the gloves was "cut and torn," indicating it had been "forcibly removed" or ripped from the scalps of the victims.

A previous expert witness, Los Angeles Coroner Dr. Lakshmanan Sathayavaran, testified that he believed the killer grasped both victims by their hair as he slit and stabbed their throats.

Mr. Deedrick said a "mystery hair" on the right glove could have come from Goldman but definitely did not come from any crime lab workers or detectives in the case, including Mark Fuhrman, whom the defence has accused of planting the glove on Simpson's estate.

There were also dog hairs on the right-hand glove that could have come from Nicole Simpson's akita, who led passersby to the bodies of the victims after the murders.

Britons sweat as flaming June finally arrives

LONDON (AP) — Railway tracks have buckled. Scottish roads are melting. One sunbather's skirt caught fire.

Not everyone would call temperatures in the high 80s a heat wave. But to the fair-skinned British, more used to drizzle and chill, "flaming June" has arrived with a vengeance.

So it's sunburn all round as "mad dogs and Englishmen go out in the midday sun," in the pithy lyric by Noel Coward.

"We've got to make the most of it, this could be the only summer we get," said Yorkshirewoman Linda Beecham as she exposed pale arms to the sun in London's Trafalgar Square Friday. Her 11-year-old son Neil wore a baseball cap with integral, battery-operated fan — bought on a family vacation in Spain.

There was no chance of a cooling dip in the square's famous fountains, however. They are turned off while the plinth beneath Nelson's column is refurbished.

"It's diabolical. As an Englishman, I'm embarrassed," said ice cream seller Brian Thomas. "There's nothing for tourists or the locals."

In Central London, the temperature at midday Friday was 88 F (31 C), the hottest June day in the capital since 1976, according to the

Italy launches major mafia crackdown

ROME (R) — Police said Saturday they had arrested a leading mafia suspect and were looking for about 150 others in a crackdown on organised crime extending from northern Italy to Sicily.

Natale D'Emmanuele, 55, the alleged "financial mind" of the mafia in the eastern Sicilian city of Catania and cousin of jailed boss Benedetto "Nitto" Santapaola, was arrested in a dawn swoop on his house outside the city.

Police said Mr. D'Emmanuele had a stranglehold on cemetery plots in Catania and dealt in arms and drugs trafficking, extortion and illegal money lending. He had been sought since December 1993.

In a separate operation, in the southern mainland region of Calabria, police said they were searching for alleged leading members of the local 'Ndrangheta mafia after magistrates issued 143 arrest warrants.

Police, who called "Operation Galaxy" one of their largest mafia crackdowns ever, said they had made several arrests early Saturday in northern, central and southern Italy.

A week ago police arrested mafia chief Leoluca Bagarella, brother-in-law of jailed mafia godfather Salvatore "Totò" Riina and alleged to be one of the heirs of cosa nostra.

Mr. Bagarella, who had been at large since 1991, was arrested while driving alone in the outskirts of the Sicilian capital Palermo last Saturday.

Last April, police conducted an anti-mafia blitz across Sicily, arresting 17 alleged mafiosi in Catania and Palermo and charging 32 jailed mobsters with 17 murders and the bombing of a television celebrity's villa.

7 shot in San Francisco's Chinatown

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A gunfight between two groups of youths erupted on the streets of Chinatown Friday evening, injuring seven people, two seriously.

Shots were fired as one group chased another. Police Cmdr. Dennis Martel said. At least one bystander, a woman four months pregnant, was among the victims.

The shooting began after five or six youths standing on a corner were approached by another group, Cmdr. Martel said. The first group fled, but it was not clear which group opened fire.

A 23-year-old man shot in the abdomen was listed in critical condition and a 16-year-old boy shot in the groin was in serious condition at San Francisco General Hospital.

Four others were in stable condition at the hospital, including the pregnant woman who had gunshot wounds in her back and feet, said Dr. Steven Hoffmann.

U.S. court moves to right on social issues

WASHINGTON (R) — The U.S. Supreme Court, dominated by an aggressive conservative majority, has moved sharply to the right on contentious social issues touching everything from student life to politics and religion.

In the 1994-95 term ending Thursday, the conservatives with just a 5-to-4 majority in a string of rulings, cut back historic civil rights protections and lowered the traditional wall of separation between church and state.

The nine-member high court also upheld drug testing of student-athletes and ruled that Congress exceeded its legal authority by banning guns near schools, a decision that may lead to the return of more power to the states on that issue.

Legal experts agreed the term showed a significant shift to the right, but said it remained to be seen if the court has launched a conservative revolution that will cast aside many liberal precedents from the past 50 years.

"This term saw a dramatic shift with the conservatives not only exerting more control, but also engaging in judicial activism by striking down laws and policies," Georgetown University law Professor Louis Michael Seidman said.

He said the court appeared to take note of the 1994 election in which Republicans regained complete control of Congress from President Bill Clinton's Democrats for the first time since 1954.

"Ideas thought to have been crackpot a year ago now are in the mainstream," Prof. Seidman said, adding that the key factor will be how the court follows up its rulings later. "A lot turns on future appointments and the 1996 election," he said.

The conservative faction consists of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Justices Antonin Scalia, Clarence Thomas and the slightly more moderate Anthony Kennedy and Sandra Day O'Connor — all appointed by Republican presidents.

The more liberal wing is made up of justices John Paul Stevens, David Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen Breyer. The latter two were chosen by Mr. Clinton.

The liberal American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) said the court's historic commitment to racial justice "took a severe beating" during the term.

The ACLU denounced decisions that set tough new restrictions on federal affirmative action programs benefiting minorities and on the drawing of voting districts based on race. It also criticized a school desegregation ruling.

"The Supreme Court is reflecting the mood of the country. It is no longer offering the country a higher moral vision," said ACLU legal director Steven Shapiro.

Conservative court analyst Bruce Fein called it one of the best terms for conservatives in several years, but said, "it is premature to claim a Super Bowl victory."

He said the court may be moving slowly to restrict affirmative action rather than abolishing it entirely because of the intense political controversy surrounding the issue and in the hope that Congress might act on its own.

Not all the major decisions handed down this term followed the 5-4, conservative-liberal split.

The court did strike down laws setting term limits for members of Congress, a politically popular idea generally backed by conservative Republicans, and it did preserve the government's ability to protect endangered species in a major victory for environmentalists.

Grachev survives but faces battle for job

MOSCOW (R) — Russian Defence Minister Pavel Grachev's close personal ties with President Boris Yeltsin have saved his skin for now but the architect of Moscow's Chechnya campaign may still face a battle to survive.

Mr. Yeltsin sacked four top officials Friday over a bloody hostage taking in the southern town of Budenkovsk but ignored parliamentary deputies' calls for Gen. Grachev to be axed and the minister's own offer to resign over the crisis and the broader campaign in rebel Chechnya.

"He is still needed by the president," said Sergei Glaziev, head of the opposition Democratic Party of Russia Saturday. He was speaking shortly after the government had survived a no-confidence vote in the State Duma lower house of parliament.

Mr. Yeltsin owes Gen. Grachev, who has risen through the ranks from paratrooper to four-star general, an enormous political debt. The 47-year-old Afghan war veteran supported Mr.

Yeltsin during a failed coup against last Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in August 1991 and backed him in October 1993, ordering his tanks, albeit after long hesitation, to blast Mr. Yeltsin's hardline opponents in the White House parliament building.

Mr. Yeltsin has been keen to court the army, mindful of the influence it has had and could have again on Russian politics.

"The president is afraid to destabilize the army. Gen. Grachev has created a command structure by now and all the top generals were appointed by him," said Alexander Piskunov, deputy head of the Duma Defence Committee.

"If he is replaced by a prominent figure, the command structure would be changed and Yeltsin didn't want that."

But other deputies said time may be running out for Gen. Grachev, whom Mr. Yeltsin has called "the best defence minister Russia or the Soviet Union ever had."

The chaotic Chechnya campaign, in which thousands of people have been killed in more than six months of fighting, is highly unpopular and was one of the key reasons why the Duma passed an earlier vote of no confidence in the government on June 21.

"I think Grachev is doomed but he will be needed as a big sacrifice for Chechnya, not just for Budenkovsk. He will be sacked shortly before the presidential elections," said Vyacheslav Nikonov of the centrist Pres Faction.

Reformist former Acting Premier Yegor Gaidar said his Russia's Choice bloc still wanted Gen. Grachev to be sacked.

"We think it is necessary for military reform," he said.

But Gen. Grachev is proving to be a great survivor.

Even before the Chechen campaign began in December, Gen. Grachev faced calls to quit with analysts saying army morale was low.

The cries intensified last October after Dmitry Khodolov, a Moscow newspaper journalist, was blown up while investigating corruption in the army and among top Russian officials. Gen. Grachev denied involvement in corruption or Khodolov's death.

In February, Mr. Yeltsin sacked a deputy defence minister closely associated with Gen. Grachev and speculation grew that the minister would also go.

But he stayed and despite criticism at home and abroad, his troops have crushed most rebel resistance in Chechnya. It was a confident-looking Grachev who called at a military parade marking the end of World War II in Europe for spending on the armed forces to be boosted.

Reports emerged around that time that Mr. Yeltsin was about to make Gen. Grachev Russia's first marshal.

Many deputies and analysts say Mr. Yeltsin and Gen. Grachev are bound together by the blood spilt in 1993 and by close personal friendship.

He and Gen. Grachev, once old army buddies, became bitter enemies. "There is no room for me in Grachev's army," Gen. Lebed said Friday. "That's for sure."

For a long time, President Boris Yeltsin backed Gen. Lebed in his sparring with Gen. Grachev — even when Gen. Lebed publicly condemned the president as a "minus" for Russia.

Some observers speculated that Mr. Yeltsin felt safer with Gen. Lebed, a potential campaign rival, confined within the ranks of the army rather than loose on the political scene.

When Mr. Yeltsin accepted Gen. Lebed's resignation on June 14, the respected daily newspaper Segodnya called it political "suicide."

The day after Gen. Lebed gave up his command, the ministry ordered the 14th Army to begin returning its hundreds of thousands of weapons and hundreds of thousands of tons of ammunition back to Moscow.

Within the troubled ranks of Russia's post-Soviet army, Gen. Lebed is a hero for speaking out. Everything from the corrupt brass to the handling of the war in Chechnya to the policies of the president has aroused his ire.

24 rescued from collapsed S. Korean department store

SEOUL (AP) — Greased down with vegetable oil and liquid soap, 24 survivors slithered to safety Saturday, more than 51 hours after being trapped beneath tonnes of debris from a collapsed shopping mall.

As night fell, feverish work continued to save more than two dozen people from three other pockets and search for more survivors. Cranes and other heavy equipment that had been removing heavy concrete slabs were stilled out of fear the shaky rubble could cave in.

A five-story wing of Sampoong Department Store collapsed Thursday, killing at least 113 people, injuring 910 and leaving 246 unaccounted for. About 60 people had been rescued earlier.

Mostly contract cleaners for the ritzy store, the 24 people who were pulled out by rope, then carried by stretcher or piggyback by rescuers, had survived together in a dressing room in the third basement of the shopping complex.

Once they were detected, it took rescue workers 13 hours to painstakingly clear a hole through the jumble of concrete slabs and iron rods, using electric saws, torches and car jacks and their hands.

While they waited, a long steel pipe was sent down to provide fresh air, water and food.

The 10 men and 14 women were all believed to be in their 40s and 50s. One was reported to be slightly injured, but the others said they were largely unscathed.

The first two to emerge were greeted by applause and cheers from hundreds of family members and reporters.

They were all taken to waiting ambulances, many shielding their eyes or covering them with towels against the sudden glare of flood-lamps and photographers' strobes. The sound of sirens filled the night.

Officials blamed the disaster on shoddy construction. Four executives of the shopping complex were arrested Saturday night on negligence charges. Police had said they knew the top floor was crumbling hours before the disaster but decided not to close and left without warning anyone.

Yonhap TV reported 22 people remained in one pocket in the third basement. Rescue workers earlier had found five people alive in two different pockets in the basement of the complex's other wing, which also was heavily damaged.

The Red Cross asked relatives to provide the numbers of pagers or cellular phones that the missing may have been carrying. It hoped that rescuers or sound detectors could hear the devices beeping, even if the owners were unconscious.

Among the missing was Frank Bakes, a 58-year-old power-plant engineer from Oradell, New Jersey, who had gone to the mall just before the collapse to shop. Also missing were an unidentified 35-year-old French businessman and a 45-year-old Taiwanese chef.

Officials had almost abandoned hope of finding more survivors Saturday, after thick plumes of toxic smoke from fires set off by crushed cars in the basement parking lots blanketed the lower reaches of the rubble.

They later discovered that the fire started in the second basement parking lot. The smoke rose through the rubble, raising the possibility of more survivors in the third and fourth basements, officials said.

Tales of dramatic rescues and tragedies filled newspapers and television reports. Funeral services were held Saturday for three victims.

Roh Sung-Eun was to have married Saturday. Disastrous, she instead was running from hospital to hospital for word about her missing fiancé.

"I'm almost crazy," Ms. Roh said, her eyes reddened and her voice cracked after constant sleeplessness.

Ms. Roh, 26, was delighted when her fiancé, Kim Sung-Hwan, 30, a student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, took her to the department store Thursday to do shopping for their upcoming wedding.

As they were about to leave, Kim asked her to wait a few minutes, saying he forgot to buy something. It was the last time she saw him.

Her father, Roh Jong-Sang, a lawyer, Saturday called each of the guests invited to the wedding to notify them that the ceremony was "just postponed, not cancelled."

"I still believe he will come back alive," he said, his voice choked with emotion.

Late Friday, a 40-year-old high school teacher was rescued, 27 hours after he was trapped, during which he entrusted a last will to a stranger nearby.

"I don't know whether I am alive or dreaming," the teacher, Hong Sung-Tae, smiling, told reporters from a hospital bed. "I experienced what my mother told me when I was young: 'Where there is a will, there is a way.'"

Mr. Hong, convinced he was going to die, asked a woman trapped nearby to find two bankbooks in his school desk and hand them to his wife and son. The woman was rescued earlier.

Mr. Hong's was one of about 40 dramatic rescues of bloodied and battered victims Friday. Four people were rescued Saturday morning.

High-tech sound equipment donated by the U.S. military arrived from Hawaii and was put to work Saturday, trying to detect other survivors beneath the tangled debris. Other detectors had come from Japan Friday evening.

Relatives posted notices on hospital walls with photos and descriptions of the missing.

President Kim Young-Sam visited the site and ordered renewed safety checks on high-rises and other large buildings.

"I cannot stop feeling grief," President Kim said, after visiting the site.

Some 40,000 people shopped daily at the bright pink, 356-shop complex, comprised of two wings connected by a three-story lobby and four levels underground. It was built on a slope over a former garbage dump.

It was the latest in a string of accidents attributed to slipshod workmanship.

Two deadly gas explosions this year killed 113 people, and a bridge collapse in Seoul last October killed another 32.

Maverick Russian general begins political career

MOSCOW (AP) — Alexander Lebed, one of Russia's most popular generals, headed for Moscow Friday and a new career in politics that could soon blossom into a presidential campaign.

Gen. Lebed will take up new duties in the Russian capital as deputy chairman of the Congress of Russian Communities, a party dedicated to protecting the 25 million ethnic Russians in neighbouring countries that were once part of the Soviet Union.

Although the Congress has a distinctly nationalist platform, Gen. Lebed's views on many pressing political issues are still unknown. He calls himself a centrist.

Gen. Lebed resigned his command last month rather than oversee the dismantling of his beloved 14th Army.

His staunch patriotism, plain-spoken manner and reputation as a tough commander have given him broad appeal, especially among Russians longing for a firm hand to impose order on Russia's post-Soviet chaos and restore national pride.

"We have everything: A rich land that covers an eighth of the globe, uncountable natural resources. And we've lived like swine for decades," Gen. Lebed said in a television interview Friday, vowing to change things.

A career military man not known for his political sophistication, Gen. Lebed said Friday he's considering a run for the presidency in 1996.

Polls indicate he is already one of Russia's more popular public figures. Insiders say he is already the candidate-in-waiting most feared by long-established politicians and a wild card in the electoral deck.

The 45-year-old paratrooper became a national hero three years ago when he took command of the 14th Army in the breakaway Trans-Dniester region of Moldova, a former Soviet republic bordering Hungary, and ended a civil war.

When Defence Minister Pavel Grachev decided to cut the Russian contingent in Moldova, Gen. Lebed tendered his resignation.

He insists a pullout could reignite the civil war, in part because the 14th's immense arsenal might fall into the wrong hands as troop strength shrinks.

"The entire army would have to load freight trains for 22 months without stopping to remove all the arms and ammunition," he told reporters as he left Tiraspol, capital of the breakaway region and headquarters of the 14th Army.

The 14th Army consists of about 10,000 troops, most of them conscripted locally by Gen. Lebed despite protests from the Defence Ministry. "I only maintained combat strength," Gen. Lebed insisted.

The day after Gen. Lebed gave up his command, the ministry ordered the 14th Army to begin returning its hundreds of thousands of weapons and hundreds of thousands of tons of ammunition back to Moscow.

Mandela urges Inkatha, ANC end violence

PIETERMARITZBURG, South Africa (R) — President Nelson Mandela, at the funeral of an old comrade in the Zulu heartland, urged supporters of his African National Congress (ANC) and the rival Inkatha Freedom Party Saturday to end political violence.

"There are too many orphans and widows. Fresh graves litter the hills and valleys. Families are torn apart," Mr. Mandela told several thousand mourners at the funeral of ANC veteran Harry Gwala in KwaZulu-Natal province.

"Now is the time to change all this. Nothing, absolutely nothing, must be spared to ensure that life, limb and property are protected."

At least 11,000 people have been killed in a decade of political fighting between supporters of the ANC and those of the Zulu-based IFP.

The IFP, which rules in KwaZulu-Natal, is a junior partner in Mr. Mandela's coalition government but is at loggerheads with the ANC over demands for greater provincial powers.

Mr. Mandela said the greatest enemy of the people of KwaZulu-Natal was political violence.

"I call with all humility on members of the ANC and IFP, the church, youth, intellectuals and business. Everybody must now stand up and fight for peace and unity. To that youth, it is your future that is being destroyed. You can't allow political leaders to destroy your future."

"Both in the ANC and IFP are decent people... let us forget everything and stand up and unite and fight for these things (development)," Mr. Mandela said.

About 5,000 people listened as Mr. Mandela paid tribute to Gwala at the heavily-guarded Jan Smuts Stadium, in the city of Pietermaritzburg.

Gwala, a Stalinist and hardline member of ANC and the South African Communist Party, died from heart failure last week at the age of 74.

"Our ranks have been robbed of the company of a unique revolutionary, an honest comrade whose tongue was as sharp as his agile mind," Mr. Mandela said.

Gwala spent two prison terms with Mr. Mandela, 76, on Robben Island for his involvement in the military struggle to topple South Africa's former apartheid government.

"(He) has left a void that will be difficult to fill," Mr. Mandela said, referring to the man dubbed the "lion of the midlands" for his fiery rhetoric and opposition to the old apartheid order and his political foes in Inkatha.

He said Gwala was brave and hunted in dealing with the defenders of apartheid, "but he was equally honest and blunt in raising issues within the ranks of the liberation movement."

Gwala's simple coffin, guarded by several men in the uniform of the ANC's former armed wing, Umkhonto We Sizwe (Spear of the Nation), was decorated with a single wreath of flowers.

Later Saturday, President Mandela left for Japan and South Korea on a mission to sell the new South Africa and to assure business and government his post-apartheid rainbow nation was investor-friendly.

Japanese and Korean diplomats expected the visits would strengthen expanding ties, with Japan already South Africa's biggest aid donor.

In Tokyo, a Japanese official said: "President Mandela's visit will be a symbolic event marking the beginning of Japan's new relations with South Africa and all African nations."

Besides formal state functions, Mr. Mandela — on his third trip to Japan since 1990 — will attend lunches hosted by business leaders in Tokyo and Seoul. He is being accompanied by Trade and Industry Minister Trevor Maouel and Foreign Minister Alfred Nzo.

He will meet Japanese leaders including Prime Minister Tomichi Murayama and Emperor Akihito.

Diplomatic sources said Mr. Mandela was disappointed during his last visit in 1991 at the Japanese government's then refusal to provide funds to the ANC because it said it financially aided governments not political parties.

Rwandan Hutus accuse Kigali of gross violations

NAIROBI (R) — A new party for Rwandan Hutu refugees Saturday accused the Tutsi-led government in Kigali of gross human rights violations against Hutus and called on the world community to pressure Rwanda into dialogue with it.

But at its first news conference in Kenya since it was set up in April, the Rally for the Return and Democracy in Rwanda (RDR) also ruled out a violent return to the tiny central African nation saying that would plunge Rwanda into more chaos.

"The continuing gross violations of human rights in Rwanda has been confirmed by, among others, human rights groups," RDR Vice President Claver Kanyarushoki told reporters.

Aid workers and human rights groups estimate over 40,000 are being held by the Tutsi-dominated Rwanda Patriotic Front (RPF) army which took power last July after driving the Hutu army into exile in Burundi, Tanzania and Zaire.

The government in Kigali says only isolated cases of killings by its troops have taken place, despite a massacre at Kibeho refugee camp which killed up to 2,000 refugees.

Over two million Hutus fled between April and July last year, saying they feared being killed in revenge for the genocide of up to one million Tutsis and Hutu moderates by Hutu troops and militiamen.

Mr. Kanyarushoki described the situation in refugee camps in Burundi, Tanzania and Zaire as desperate with food rations cut to their lowest while Hutu refugees in Burundi had become victims in the country's Hutu rebellion against the Tutsi army.

"There are a lot of incidents of extra-judicial executions. Arbitrary arrests and overcrowding of prisons and victimisations of Hutus trying to reclaim their property," he added.

Mr. Kanyarushoki said RDR, based in the Zairean region of Goma where many Hutu refugees are, estimated up to 100,000 Hutus had been detained in filthy overcrowded prisons in Rwanda after last year's civil war and genocidal killings.

Kigali has repeatedly refused to negotiate with what it says are former officials, many of whom it accused of helping to organise the genocide.

The Paris-based politician denied reports that Hutus were rearming and training, ready for a violent return.

"RDR has twice refuted these reports, whose sole aim was to prepare the international community to accept lifting the arms embargo imposed on Kigali by the United Nations in May 1994," he said.

Pope calls for greater church role in politics

BRATISLAVA (R) — Pope John Paul, anxious to rebuild Catholic influence in Eastern Europe after 40 years of communism, told Slovak bishops Saturday to prepare for greater church involvement in politics.

"Due attention must be given to (the laity's) training for social and political involvement through the diffusion and study... of the church's social doctrine," he told the Slovak Bishop's Conference during a visit to Slovakia.

The Communists set about dismantling Catholic power as soon as they took over Eastern and Central Europe in the late 1940s.

Only in the Pope's native Poland did the church remain powerful and since the 1989 fall of communism it has set about regaining influence throughout the former East Bloc.

"Just as you helped your people to withstand the attacks on atheistic communism, now you need to be concerned to offer adequate means for them to defend themselves against today's enemies," the Pope said.

Egypt rules out attack on Sudan

Ethiopian security men, were involved in the plot. Without citing proof, Mr. Mubarak has specifically named Sheikh Hassan Tourabi, the Islamic leader widely regarded as the power behind Sudan's government, as the mastermind of the attempt. Sudanese leaders have denied any role, blaming it instead on Egyptian militants waging a three-year Islamic revolt against the Cairo government. More than 800 people have died in the insurgency although it has diminished in recent months.

Dr. Baz's remark did little to soften the rhetoric in Khartoum.

A van with a loudspeaker rambled through the Sudanese capital's dusty streets and urged residents to gather Monday for a demonstration against the "arrogance of Mubarak."

"We will make Halaib a graveyard of the invaders," the loudspeaker said, referring to a disputed border area.

Meanwhile, the leader of Sudan's government, Lieutenant-General Omar Al Bashir, promised to give a gun to any civilian who could carry one to repulse any Egyptian attack. He promised not to "relinquish an inch" of Halaib.

"Sudan is facing a great conspiracy from Hosni Mubarak," Gen. Bashir told a rally Friday.

Sudan's army, vastly inferior to Egypt's, is tied up fighting a long-running war against southern rebels.

Since Gen. Bashir's 1989 coup, relations with Egypt have never been good. The two have sparred repeatedly over Halaib, and Egypt has accused Sudan of training and financing militants.

Sudan, named by Washington as a state sponsoring "terrorism," has criticised Egypt for giving refuge to Sudanese dissidents.

Both countries have sought to use the assassination attempt and border skirmishes to whip up anger and bolster sagging popularity.

Al Ingaz Al Watani, a Sudanese government newspaper, said soldiers would make a pledge of "holy war and martyrdom" to confront what it called the Egyptian provocations.

In Egypt, a front-page editorial Saturday in Al Akhbar, a leading government-owned newspaper, said the assassination attempt justified "a strong military strike to overthrow the corrupt terrorist regime in Khartoum."

The remaining police from the station fled to Halaib town, "which is currently under siege by Egyptian military forces."

The Egyptian army also rounded up 30 policemen and after disarming them forced them to move from their observation posts to Abu Ramad, further south in the border zone.

It made no mention of a third reported fatality, a soldier killed on Wednesday in another incident. Egypt has confirmed the deaths of the policemen but not the soldier, and claims the Sudanese fired first.

Sudan underlined in the complaint that Halaib, which is controlled militarily by Egypt but claimed by both nations, "is Sudanese territory because its population is Sudanese."

It called on the United Nations to urge Egypt to withdraw its military and administrative personnel from the zone and start negotiations to end the long-running dispute over the land.

Ethiopia said meanwhile its security forces shot dead three gunmen on the run since they failed attempt to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

State-run Ethiopian television said the shoot-out, in which two Ethiopian security men were wounded, took place in an Addis Ababa suburb. All three of the dead, suspected of mounting the failed attack on Mr. Mubarak on Monday, were of Arab origin, the television added.

Enough is enough — King

we, Jordanians and Israelis, are looking after it without the presence of U.N. observers or peacekeeping missions.

"It has recovered to Jordan its lands that were under occupation. (It has also restored) our rights in terms of water in the context of Jordan and Israel, and much has been done in that direction. Many of the barriers have disappeared, and people move between the two countries, and I believe that in time, what will be achieved is peace between people."

"We have a peace treaty, but now we are in the process of peacebuilding. So sometimes I feel that maybe it is a fact that we are moving too slowly, in terms of all the years that we have lost in the past, to give our people the opportunity and the chance to live the kind of life that we never had. But, at the same time, I believe that we have covered enough ground to be proud of so far."

"Of course on the Palestinian-Israeli track we are fully supportive of the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the people of Palestine, and its leadership. We certainly do whatever we can through the opportunities presented now through peace between Jordan and Israel to help all concerned to move towards the establishment of peace."

"I hope that the Syrian track and thereafter the Lebanese track, which is connected to it, will also move soon and that what we have achieved will be a cornerstone in a comprehensive peace in this region."

The King expressed hope that the delays in arriving at an agreement between the Palestine Liberation Organisation and Israel on expanding self-rule to the West Bank "will be temporary."

"I hope that negotiations will continue directly between the two parties concerned with the support of all of us to ensure that the Palestinians recover their rights on their legitimate soil. I believe the subject is really paramount initially as one of the steps that will lead to the recovery of Palestinian rights on all of the soil which is subject to question and I hope that something will happen rather soon."

An overwhelming majority of people support the peace process despite the "terrible" acts of violence by people opposed to peace on both sides, the King said.

The Monarch stressed the need for rapid progress in the peace negotiations, "because, unless that is achieved those who belong to the peace camp will have their spirits dampened by the lack of progress and the dangers are tremendous."

On Arab East Jerusalem the King reaffirmed that the Holy City is part of the territories that Israel occupied in the 1967 war.

But in order to achieve a just and durable settlement that would consolidate and maintain peace, the King said, the issue had to be tackled at a Palestinian-Arab-Israeli level and a spiritual level that would ensure that all the children of Abraham have their rights in the Holy City.

Arab East Jerusalem "should be under the domain of not any particular side, but should belong to all believers in God, and should have, above the sovereignty of any nation," the King said. "Beyond that, Western Jerusalem has been a de facto capital of Israel (and) Eastern Jerusalem should be the capital of the Palestinian people..."

"If that ever happens we shall see the beginnings of the coming together of the followers of the three great monotheistic religions and we shall see also Jerusalem

WHERE CAN one learn Arabic, Beche-de-mer, Bisayan, Dari, Hausa, Inktitut, Lifu, Mandingo, More, Najuat, Peul, Sorbian and Tigrinya, as well as Chinese, Russian, Kurdish, Estonian, Tahitian or Tibetan? The answer is at the "Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales" (INALCO) (National Institute of Oriental Languages and Civilisations), better known as "Langues O", which is a familiar abbreviation of its original name, the "Ecole des Langues Orientales" (School of Oriental Languages).

"Langues O", which is a breeding ground for diplomats, teachers, researchers, historians and business executives and where 81 languages are taught today, this year celebrates the bicentenary of its creation in 1795. In fact, the distant origins of this venerable establishment go back to the 17th century, in the reign of Louis XIV. At the time, there was interest in establishing relations between France and the countries of the Levant without going through local intermediaries. Hence Colbert created an "Ecole des Langues Orientales" for the purpose of training young French people as interpreters. During the Revolution, the Convention took up this idea and created the "Ecole Speciale des Langues Orientales" "for the purpose of teaching living oriental languages acknowledged as being useful for politics and trade". A few months earlier, the same convention had created three other prestigious French schools, the "Ecole Polytechnique", the "Conservatoire National des Arts et Metiers" and the "Ecole Normale Supérieure".

Originally, the mission of the "Ecole des Langues Orientales", which was set up in the Bibliothéque Nationale library, was to teach three "Muslim" languages — Arabic, Turkish and Persian. The number of students and teaching posts grew so rapidly that the whole school shortly had to move to its historical headquarters in rue de Lille, on the edge of the Latin Quarter. The number of languages taught increased from about twenty in 1914 to nearly forty just after World War II and double that half a century later. Today, "Langues O", which, in 1971 became INALCO and is spread among five teaching centres in Paris and the near suburbs with more than 10,000 students, is a unique establishment in the world, receiving students from many different places and offering a tremendous diversity of courses (more than 1,500).

The missions which have been assigned to it are vast. First of all, it has to "provide initial and continuing training in the languages and civilisations of Asia, Africa, Eastern Europe, Oceania and the Amerindian peoples and in the geography, history, institutions and political, economic and social life of the countries concerned". We can note the particularly broad concept of "Oriental" — in fact, it simply means non-western languages and cultures.

The school also has "to develop research in these different areas, in particular in relation with other French and foreign research organisations; to contribute to knowledge of the countries concerned by spreading their scientific productions; and to foster university and cultural exchanges and cooperation between France and the countries in question."

But its functions are not limited to dispensing knowledge and culture and to being a means of entering the diplomatic corps. It has also set up professional training schemes by combining language teaching with more technical courses such as international trade, international relations and intercultural communication. It also offers the possibility of advanced training in the sciences of language and automatic language processing accessible to non-specialists of oriental languages.

Research concerns all of the school's areas of teaching — languages, linguistics, literature, history, geography, contemporary civilisation, economics, history of art, sociology, ethnology and new information technologies. It is carried out in about twenty centres, known as "geographical" when they deal with a particular area (for instance Balkan or Chinese studies), or "thematic" or "transversal" such as for comparative poetics or oral literature.

Courses in continuing education are also offered to meet the specific needs of firms or of private individuals.

On the score of international relations, which represent one of the school's main vocations, INALCO takes part in the various university exchange programmes of the European Union — Erasmus (for the development of student and teacher mobility in higher education establishments), Lingua (to improve knowledge of the languages used in the member countries of the Union) and Tempus (which aims to stimulate relations with Central and Eastern Europe). Moreover, it has signed 75 bilateral cooperation agreements with various university establishments all over the world.

The "Langues O" library has 430,000 books and 7,076 different periodicals in 70 languages, including a remarkable heritage of ancient works (incunabula, manuscripts, etc.).

Its famous students include the former president of the Council of State Edgar Faure (who studied Russian), the psychoanalyst Jacques Lacan (Chinese), the director Antoine Vitez (Russian), the ethnologist and explorer Théodore Monod (Arabic), Prince Henri de Mont-possibilities and the potential of being partners in building the future of this entire region in the context of peace," he said. "I hope that in any event within the next two, three, four, five years at the most, this country would have made such strides in changing the quality of life of its people... to answer all those sceptics once and for all as for the merits of peace and security or the continuation of the darkness that threatens everybody in this entire region — which was what was happening over so many years. Peace obviously has to bring about with it a change in the quality of life of people and I hope that it will soon be possible."

"I expect our many friends in Europe to be our partners," said the King. "We are close together and they are close to us, and we are proud of the relations that exist between us and we would like to see them develop and grow..."

Asked whether there was fundamentalism in Jordan, the King replied, "not to any troubling point."

"We have a dialogue," he added, "I believe that the overwhelming majority of the people are the guarantee that (there will be no) extremism in the future."

In reply to another question on economic development, the King said Jordan had seen some concrete results and "we have been promised more."

He pointed out that Amman would be hosting the Middle East and North Africa economic summit in October.

Paris school of oriental languages celebrates its bicentenary pezat, the husband of the Queen of Denmark (Vietnamese and Japanese) and a host of French ambassadors.

The languages taught belong to all the families which exist in the world — Indo-European, Caucasian, Altaic, Uralian, Sino-Tibetan, Thai, Afro-Asian,

Nilo-Saharan, Niger-Kordofan, Austroasiatic, Dravidian, Austronesian and Amerindian. Some of them, such as Chinese, are used by millions of people. Others, such as Judeo-Spanish, Judeo-Arabic or Romany are only spoken in scattered communities and can no longer be located on a map. Others still, such as Onallou in the Pacific, are now only spoken by a handful of men.

The school's bicentenary celebrations include going down the Mekong, with stopovers in China, Burma, Laos, Thailand, Cambodia and Vietnam.

Iranian cinema, like caviar, struggles on home front

TEHRAN (AFP) — Iranian cinema has won laurels abroad but is looking for a new identity at home as it struggles to overcome financial problems and free itself from government censorship, ideology and commercial trivia.

Since the 1979 Islamic revolution, the Iranian film industry has gained remarkable success on the international scene, winning dozens of awards in film festivals.

A young Iranian director, Jafar Panahi, won the international critics' prize at the Cannes film festival last month for "The White Balloon."

Last year, directors Abbas Kiarostami and Ebrahim Mokhtari earned much acclaim for their movies "Under the Olive Tree" and "Zinat," with the former nominated for the Cannes festival's top prize, the Golden Palm.

But while artistic movies have earned international praise, they have a small audience of intellectuals at home and are rarely chosen for screening by the authorities.

"Our intellectual cinema is like Persian caviar. There's a strong taste for it abroad, but hardly any at home. It's a commodity only for export," veteran actor Manuchehr Sadeghpour said.

Political and religious hardliners in Iran are often distrustful of art movies because they lack pro-government and pro-religion propaganda. Such productions often face political obstacles, including arbitrary censorship.

The government maintains a close watch over the industry, from script writing to production to distribution as well as in the screening of movies at the country's 400 theatres.

Last week, 214 filmmakers and actors published an open letter criticising government "interference" in the movie industry and calling on the authorities to ease restrictions.

In a separate move in April, another group of independent film-makers urged the government to stop meddling in the process of film-making or risk losing private investors.

"Our cinema must choose between art, commerce and the government," a critically-acclaimed movie director told AFP.

Besides from politics, the industry has also been hampered by financial problems.

After subsidising movie production during the first decade after the revolution, the cash-strapped government in 1992 stopped allocating funds for the industry apart from the occasional war and historical movie.

The absence of funding has led to a sharp drop in overall productions with only 40 movies expected to be made this year compared to 70 in 1994.

An increase of up to 400 per cent in costs has also contributed to the fall in production — especially of art movies which have been the hardest hit for their failure to attract large audiences and investors.

The director of the guild of theatre owners, Mohammad Khorram, argued that movies made in Iran "these days are of an inferior quality" compared to the past and that the industry was threatened with "bankruptcy."

Even war and ideological movies with strong political and religious themes have been facing difficulties because of reduced government support and a fall in ticket sales.

But commercial movies and crowd-pleasers have less of a problem since they avoid taboo or controversial subjects and strictly follow guidelines set by the political and religious authorities.

troops later cleared the road and 20 settlers were detained, the radio said.

In Gaza City, the militant group Hamas charged Saturday that Palestinian police interrogators shaved off the hair and beards of three of its jailed leaders in an attempt to humiliate them.

The chief prosecutor, Khaled Kidra, denied the allegations, saying he saw the three men in jail Friday with hair and beards intact.

Hamas leaders Mahmoud Zahar, Ahmad Bahar and Salama Safadi were detained earlier this week after a Hamas activist blew himself up in a failed attack on Israeli troops in Gaza.

"(They) have been tortured and insulted. Their hair has been shaved off and their beards plucked out," Hamas said in a leaflet distributed in Gaza on Saturday.

The leaflet warned that the group would retaliate for this "ugly crime" and urged police to release the detainees.

"The bullets of our fighters will not hesitate to punish collaborators, irrespective of their identity or their ranks," the leaflet said.

"If the authorities do not free our sheikhs soon, the angry masses will not hesitate to storm the jails and free the detainees by force."

A Hamas activist said police sources informed the group that Dr. Zahar's hair and beard were shaved off three days ago to humiliate the leader.

"Shaving beards is a crime. It's more humiliating than beatings," said the Hamas activist, who works at the group's newspaper, Al Watan. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Development bank to be formed in Gaza Strip

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Jordanian and Palestinian businessmen have got together to launch the second Palestinian commercial bank to be formed in autonomous Gaza Strip, bank officials said Saturday.

They said the Jerusalem Development and Investment Bank, which will have an authorised capital of $20 million, is expected to be operational by November.

The bank, which has been licensed by the Palestinian National Authority (PNA), has already formed its board of directors headed by Nizar Jaraneh, who also heads the Jordan Investment and Finance Bank in Amman.

Other members on the board are Mohammad Murad, vice-chairman, and Adel Hijawi, Mohammad Kamhawi, Nabil Barakat, Ibrahim Abdul Hadi, Nabil Sarraf, Raouf Abu Jaber, Walid Al Hamad, and Omar Al Alam.

Some of the directors are Jordanian businessmen while others hail from the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

It will be the second Palestinian bank to be licensed by the PNA, the bank officials noted. The first was the Palestinian Development Bank.

The officials said the Jerusalem Bank for Development and Investment, which is the first to place shares for public subscription in the Palestnian territories, will be based in the Gaza Strip and will seek to branch out throughout the West Bank.

"We have only called in 25 per cent of the authorised capital and we intend to call the rest after we start operations and assess the situation," the official told the Jordan Times.

"We will operate like any other bank, but there is a close focus on developing the Palestinian economy," said the official.

"We are interested in developing tourism, agriculture, industry, housing and trade," he said. "We also hope to play a major role in developing the infrastructure of the Palestinian expatriates."

The Jerusalem Development and Investment Bank will also contribute to efforts to set up a Palestinian stock market and offer "highly technical and specialised banking services including project studies," said the official.

Another key service the bank intends to offer is to act as managers for stock issues by Palestinian companies.

"One of our distinctions is that we intend to reinvest all the capital in the Palestinian territories and we will be the first to do so there," said the bank official.

Saudi budget deficit may persist despite higher oil prices

ABU DHABI (AFP) — Saudi Arabia could suffer from another budget deficit this year as oil prices might reverse an upward trend in the second half due to a sharp drop in seasonal demand, experts have said.

Prices have climbed by more than 15 per cent this year to reach nearly $2 above the average price of around $15.53 in 1994 due to high demand in the first quarter and OPEC's relative compliance with quotas.

But they could go down again as crude demand in the third quarter is projected to decline by nearly 700,000 barrels per day (b/d) below OPEC's official production ceiling of 24.52 million b/d, according to the group.

"OPEC is already producing above its ceiling and the decline in seasonal demand will combine with output increases by independent producers to put pressure on oil prices again," a Saudi-based economist told AFP.

"Despite the gains in the first half, I think the market is still uncertain and prices could weaken at any time. Such gains would be offset by the price decline and this will maintain or even widen the Saudi deficit," he said.

Saudi Arabia, the world's top oil producer and exporter, has assumed a minimum oil price of $14 to $15 a barrel for its 1995 budget.

As it apparently did not anticipate any major price rise, it trimmed its expenditure by around 6.2 per cent to 150 billion riyals ($40 billion) from 160 billion riyals ($42.6 billion) in 1994.

This slashed the projected deficit to around $4 billion from $10.6 billion pushing it down to nearly 3.3 per cent of the projected gross domestic product (GDP) in 1995 from 8.8 per cent in 1994.

Crude oil sales provide the bulk of the kingdom's national income and the rest comes from the export of petroleum products and non-oil items as well as the recently introduced hikes on water, electricity and telephone rates.

According to the Saudi National Commercial Bank, earnings from the sale of petroleum products are projected to reach $2.13 billion in 1995, boosting the total oil exports to $24.8 billion.

The remaining revenue would come from taxes and non-oil exports.

"The Saudi budget deficit could be sharply lower or even disappear this year only if oil prices maintained their current level and the government does not increase actual spending," a Saudi banker said.

"The kingdom earned higher than it had projected in the first half but the question is: What trend the prices will take in the second half?" he asked.

The oil ministers of the 12-nation Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), decided to keep the output ceiling until the end of 1995, leaving quotas untouched.

This is because a projected increase in world demand for 1995 of nearly one million b/d had been met by Britain, Norway and other non-OPEC producers.

But the ministers had also tried to tackle the problem of slight quota violations by some members as this could affect the market when world demand slackens in the summer.

Independent estimates showed such violations boosted OPEC's actual production by the nearly 500,000 b/d in May.

"Barring unexpected developments, 1995 is unlikely to be worse than last year, when oil prices dipped to their lowest level in five years. This means that if the Saudi budget deficit maintained its projected level, it remains low compared with previous years," a Saudi economist said.

Saudi Arabia, which produces around eight million b/d and controls more than a quarter of the world's crude, began suffering from a deficit in its budget and balance of payments in the mid-1980s, when prices were receding.

The budget shortfall hit a record $33.6 billion in 1991, due to Riyadh's large cash contributions to a U.S.-led multinational coalition which ejected Iraqi invasion forces from Kuwait.

Kuwait limits building, food subsidies

KUWAIT (IR) — Kuwait has decided to limit subsidies on house-building materials and basic foods as part of a drive to cut its soaring budget deficit.

A trade and industry ministry official said the government has set a 30 per cent ceiling on subsidies of cement and steel used in house building and will set a 30 per cent cap on subsidies of basic foods from July 1.

The effect of the limits will be to freeze the total cost of both groups of the subsidies at around 12 million dinars ($40 million), the official said in brief remarks to Reuters.

The cost of the subsidies, many of which had been running at around 50 per cent, has risen to 12 million dinars from around four million ($13 million) a decade ago, he said.

The measures are part of an attempt by government to reduce costs to help bridge a budget deficit running at around 1.5 billion dinars ($5 billion) or a fifth of national wealth as measured by gross domestic product.

Newspapers said the effect of the change was to raise the cost of subsidised steel to 75 dinars ($250) a tonne from 58 dinars ($193).

The building subsidy is applied to steel and cement used by Kuwaitis building their homes. There is a limit on the amount of subsidised material they may obtain but Kuwaitis say the permitted amount is enough to build a small home.

The official said the new ceiling for subsidies on basic foods such as rice and milk would also be set at 30 per cent. Only Kuwaitis may buy subsidised basic foods,

U.S. determined to broker free trade zone in 10 years

DENVER, Colorado (AFP) — The United States has renewed a pledge to negotiate within 10 years a huge pan-American free trade zone, stretching from Alaska to Argentina and grouping more than 700 million consumers.

Mickey Kantor, U.S. trade representative, said the objective of the meeting, attended by most finance ministers in the western hemisphere, was to jump start the programmes needed to bring about the "ambitious" goal of breaking down trade barriers among nations in the region.

The idea of a Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) was first conceived at December's Summit of the Americas in Miami, though no timetable was set during that historic meeting.

Because of a serious economic crisis that has struck

Mexico since then, many delegation members stressed that a new push for the mammoth free trade would give Latin America a badly needed boost in morale.

In a final declaration, the 34 ministers promised the aims of the Americas trade zone would be compatible with World Trade Organisation terms and would not seek to erect trade barriers to any other countries.

The declaration said the countries agreed to set up seven working groups focusing on issues including market access, investments and subsidies and which would report regularly to deputy trade ministers of the 34 states.

The groups would outline concrete steps to take towards setting up the free trade zone of the Americas and further plans would be discussed at the next ministerial meeting scheduled for March 1996 in Colombia.

Mr. Kantor stressed the importance of involving the private sector in the negotiations, a fact underscored by a meeting of business executives in Denver at the conclusion of the conference of finance ministers.

Speaking before a group of American, Brazilian and Argentine businessmen, Mr. Kantor said the zone could not succeed without private industry, which he called the engine of growth in the western hemisphere.

Economic figures show how trade liberalisation in Latin America these last few years has proved a boom to the U.S. economy.

American exports in this zone went from $30 billion in the mid-1980s to more than $92 billion in 1994 — the equivalent of the export total to Western Europe.

Black Sea leaders seek closer ties

BUCHAREST (R) — Leaders of the Black Sea states met on Friday to try to improve economic cooperation but were unable to ignore deep tensions in their region.

In a non-binding declaration at the end of a summit, the leaders from 11 states of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Group referred to conflicts from Yugoslavia to Nagorno-Karabakh, which overshadowed their efforts to work together.

"They shared the same opinion on the importance of settling existing problems which have a negative impact on the climate of economic cooperation," the communiqué said.

Most of the rest of the document was equally broad, talking of "needs" and "efforts" to control regional problems like uranium smuggling, drug trafficking and more basic economic burdens like road transport and energy supplies.

But despite the vague language and lack of concrete action diplomats say the summit achieved its aim of at least keeping many countries often in conflict talking to each other.

Turkey's President Suleyman Demirel said the organisation had a long way to go but offered a start.

"The (BSEC) organisation is only three years old. If you consider that the European Union is 37 years old and there are still problems ... I'm very happy with the conference," Mr. Demirel told Reuters television in an interview.

He denied that Turkey, which hosted the founding summit three years ago, wanted to control the grouping. "If we say that we (Turkey) are the locomotive, the other people will be the cars, and it won't work," he said.

Black Sea members included Romania, Russia, Ukraine, Turkey, Georgia, Moldova, Bulgaria, Greece, Azerbaijan, Armenia and Albania. The EU, Austria, Italy and Poland are among observers.

Regional disputes inevitably surfaced.

Azeri President Heydar Aliyev raised the status of talks over the disputed Nagorno-Karabakh region with Armenia.

Albanian Deputy Prime Minister Dylber Vioni raised the plight of ethnic Albanians in the neighbouring rump Yugoslavia.

Bulgarian President Zhelev also brought up the war in the former Yugoslavia, saying sanctions were "catastrophic."

Spain to advance ties with Mideast during EU presidency

MADRID (AFP) — Spain took over the rotating six-month presidency of the European Union Saturday with an ambitious agenda of projects for the 15-member community, following the disappointing French stint.

But just as domestic considerations, including a presidential election, cramped France's style, Spain is affected by political scandals affecting the government of Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez.

Madrid's priorities for the EU for the rest of this year include economic revival to create new jobs and ease the passage to a single European currency planned for 1999, tax harmonisation, freer trade and more transparency in the financial markets.

On foreign policy Spain hopes to develop a strategy for bringing about EU membership of countries in eastern and central Europe, while involving non-EU states in the Mediterranean basin more closely.

This will include negotiating new agreements on European relations with Egypt, Israel, Jordan and Morocco, setting up the controversial customs union with Turkey and strengthening ties with Malta and Cyprus, other candidates for EU membership.

Part of the aim is to combat the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in North Africa by aiding the development of those countries where it is significant.

This approach will be consolidated at a Euro-Mediterranean conference to be staged in Barcelona in November, which will bring together leaders of 27 states.

Spain also intends to strengthen links with Latin America with a view to fostering democracy and open economies, and boosting trade links with the Mercosur economic grouping of Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay.

For EU residents, Madrid intends to strengthen the internal "borderless" security zone with a European police agency and develop the idea of European citizenship, while 15 meetings are planned during Spain's tenure of the group preparing the way for the 1996 intergovernmental conference which will decide where Europe goes next.

Dabbas: Government to study salary hikes

The government is expected to start considering civil servants' salaries next week in implementation of pledges it undertook in June 1994 when it agreed to reconsider these salaries at the beginning of July every year. Chairman of the financial committee at the Lower House of Parliament Hashem Al Dabbas said the committee had sent a memorandum to the government asking it to honour pledges it made during the House's debate of the 1995 fiscal budget draft law, including a promise to study the prospect of increasing civil servants' salaries. The Finance Committee, Mr. Dabbas said, will start following up the issue soon to ensure that the government grants its employees pay raises in accordance with a sound financial equation that takes into consideration the multi-economic indicators, including the rise in living expenses.

Meanwhile, government sources have linked any pay rises to the House's approval of increasing the sales tax from seven per cent to 10 per cent. The government cannot give pay raises and shoulder additional financial burdens without having other revenues that would enable it to cover these raises in case they were approved, the sources said. The last pay raise received by civil servants, who number about 437,000, was in June 1994. At the time, the Ministry of Finance estimated that the pay raise would cost JD 58.59 million annually (Al Aswaaq).

Land prices in the Jordan Valley rose between 10 and 20 times as a result of the Middle East peace process, President of the Jordanian Real Estate Investors Society Mohammad Khair Al Kilani said. Mr. Kilani said the price of a dunum of land in the Jordan Valley rose to JD 10,000, up from JD 50-100. He said the possibility of annulling laws banning real estate sale to Israelis has caused rises in land prices in most of the Kingdom's areas. Also the establishment of tourism projects, such as hotels, led to upsurges in land prices, especially in the Sports City and Medina streets in Amman, said Mr. Kilani, who added that the real estate market is governed by rumours — "much the same as the Amman Financial Market." He said the real estate market this summer will not be as "hot" as expected, noting that the market is suffering of recession which caused investors in the market to drop their expected profits from 15-20 per cent to around 10 per cent (Al Aswaaq).

A total of 50 industrial projects with a capital of JD 4,349,000 were registered last month with the Ministry of Industry and Trade. A study prepared by the ministry's Industrial Development Department said 31 of these projects are based in Amman, six in Balqa, four in Mafrqa, three in each of Karak and Zarqa and one project in each of Madaba and Irbid (Al Ra'i).

Gulf oil income surges in first half of 1995

ABU DHABI (AFP) — An improvement in oil prices due to unusual discipline by OPEC boosted the earnings of Gulf Arab states by almost 6 billion in the first half of 1995, bankers said on Saturday.

Oil prices could end the year with the same average as the first half due to an expected recovery in demand in the last quarter and this would help the coffers of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC). "Oil prices could weaken in the third quarter due to lower seasonal demand but they will likely recover in the last quarter due to a surge in demand. This means the price gains could be maintained," one banker said. Oil prices averaged around 17 dollars in the first half of 1995 compared with 14.5 dollars in the first half of 1994. With the GCC's production remaining almost unchanged at nearly 13 million barrels per day (bpd), the price rise of 2.5 dollars means an extra revenue of around 5.9 billion dollars in the first half of 1995.

If oil prices stay at their current level through the year, then revenues could exceed $80 billion compared with around $70 billion in 1994, when prices averaged nearly $15.5.

The 17-dollar average will be the highest since crude price reached 18.33 dollars in 1992 and topped 19 dollars in 1991 due to the Gulf war. The improvement in oil prices this year was attributed to higher world demand, complaints by most OPEC members with their output quotas and Iraq's refusal to accept United Nations terms to return to the oil market. The situation is in contrast with the first quarter of 1994, when prices plunged to $13 due to overproduction, a surge in global stockpiles and growing speculation about Iraq's resumption of crude exports. GCC states — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Oman and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) — produced nearly 13.2 million bpd in the first half and they depend heavily on oil exports to finance their budget. The deterioration of crude price over the past decade has badly hurt their once flush coffers and turned large surpluses in their budgets into chronic deficits.

The six members have projected earnings at around $59 billion for 1995 but the figure does not include individual incomes in the UAE, which groups Abu Dhabi with Dubai and five other sheikhdoms.

While federal earnings were projected at $4.6 billion, the UAE's total oil income is expected to reach around $13.6 billion in 1995 at an average price of $17 and OPEC-decreed production of 2.16 million bpd. "Oil prices will likely be lower in the third quarter as demand will go down by more than 700,000 bpd. But I think they will rebound as demand will largely recover in the fourth quarter due to a surge in consumption in the northern hemisphere," an oil expert said. Experts said Gulf revenues could have sharply risen if oil producers outside the 12-nation organisation of petroleum exporting countries — mostly North Sea producers Britain and Norway — had not raised output to face a growth in global demand of around 1.2 million bpd in 1995.

Such an increase has forced OPEC to maintain its official output ceiling of 24.52 million bpd until the end of 1995, keeping the level unchanged since September 1993 and depressing OPEC's market share.

But the cartel ministers have voiced optimism prices will remain stable until the end of the year as OPEC members are producing near demand, which is projected at around 24.9 million bpd in 1995. Bankers said that if oil prices maintained their current level this year, the GCC's income would rise to its highest level since mid 1980s. "Oil prices were higher in 1992 and 1991 but Kuwait's production was negligible due to the damage to its energy sector during the Iraqi occupation," a Gulf oil executive said.

Arab stockbrokers to hold first meeting in Beirut

ABU DHABI (AFP) — More than 100 stockbrokers and officials from Arab financial markets are to meet in Beirut this week to discuss development of their stock exchanges.

The Arab Bourses' Union (ABU) is sponsoring the July 5-7 meeting, expected to draw 71 stockbrokers and 31 market officials from 10 Arab states, stockbroker Zuhair Khaswani said here Friday.

The ABU secretary general, Saafak Al Rukhaili, said it was the first meeting of its kind in the Arab World and it coincides with economic reforms in several regional countries.

"The meeting is important given the growing role of the Arab stock markets, which are expected to finance development projects in the region in the light of new economic policies."

"Such policies are giving priority to the private sector and encouraging the creation of more official stock markets," he said.

He said the conference would cover cooperation among stockbrokers, obstacles facing them, development of brokerage services, the role of markets in reforms and possible creation of a brokers' association.

The meeting will bring together stockbroker and financial officials from Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Jordan, Egypt, Tunisia, Morocco and Lebanon, as well as the United Arab Emirates.

More than 1,100 banks and companies are listed in Arab stock markets but only 10 regional states have formal stock exchanges.

The Abu Dhabi-based Arab Monetary Fund (AMF) has sought to encourage the remaining Arab League members to set up floors as part of its new policies to push for reforms to repair regional economies.

Most Arab economies are hit by debt, unemployment, inflation, and budget and balance of payment deficits.

The AMF, the main financial institution in the region, has set up a data base to link stock markets in member states. Officials said six bourses had been linked to the base while other markets are expected to follow suit.

Moroccan leader to hold fish talks in Brussels

BRUSSELS (R) — Moroccan Prime Minister Abdellatif Filali will hold talks in Brussels on Thursday to try and end the impasse over a new EU-Morocco fisheries agreement, a European Commission spokesman said on Friday.

Mr. Filali is expected to put forward fresh proposals during meetings with European Commission President Jacques Santer and Fisheries Commissioner Emma Bonino.

"It's not a proper negotiation but it's good news he's coming because it means he has something fresh to say," the spokesman said, adding the EU hoped it would be possible to fix a date for a sixth and final round of negotiations.

The EU and Morocco have been at loggerheads over Moroccan demands for sharp cuts in quotas and increased landings of catches in Moroccan ports.

Fishermen in the Spanish port of Algeciras lifted an eight-week blockade of Moroccan imports on Thursday, saying they hoped the move would lead Rabat to curb its demands for sharp cuts in EU fishing quotas.

Yugoslavia crush France to reach semifinals

ATHENS (AP) — Paced by their NBA stars, Lithuania, Croatia and Yugoslavia joined host Greece in the semifinals of the European Championship Friday and clinched berths at next summer's Olympic Games in Atlanta.

Toni Kukoc led Croatia over Italy, 71-61. Arvydas Sabonis powered Lithuania past Russia, 82-71, and Vlade Divac anchored Yugoslavia to a 104-86 victory over France.

Paragiotis Fassoulas and Fanis Christodoulou combined for 37 points and 20 rebounds to pace Greece over Spain, 66-64.

Kukoc, of the Chicago Bulls, had a game-high 24 points and 10 rebounds despite suffering a cut on his right hand as Croatia broke down Italy's stiff resistance in the second half.

The four slots from Europe for the games went to the four semifinalists here and Russia, silver medalists at the 1993 European Championship and the 1994 World Championship, now will miss the Olympics in Atlanta.

"It's a tragedy for Russian basketball," said Russian coach Sergei Belov.

Croatia and Lithuania will clash in the semifinals, while Yugoslavia takes on Greece, which it beat in the preliminary round.

Greece, the only team in the last four without NBA players, is hoping to add to its 1987 title, when it also hosted the tournament.

The Greeks slowly rallied to overcome an early nine-point Spanish lead. Forward Christodoulou, who finished the game 5-for-7 from the 3-point range, hit three straight 3-pointers at one stretch late in the half.

Centre Fassoulas, who collected his 4th foul with 7:30 left, returned to key a 10-point Greek run that decided the game. Christodoulou first sank a 3-pointer for a 54-51 lead. Fassoulas then scored the next two points, converted a three-point play and sank a book shot to make it 61-51 with 3:10 left.

The Greeks, roared on by a boisterous, capacity crowd of 20,000 at the Maroussi Olympic hall, held off Spain's final rally.

Fassoulas had 20 points. Christodoulou had 17, and each had 10 rebounds. Alberto Herreros scored 15 for Spain.

EUROPEAN BASKETBALL

Croatia, the 1992 Olympic silver medalist behind the U.S. Dream Team, ran into unexpected trouble against a determined Italian team.

Kukoc suffered a cut between his third and fourth finger on the right hand early in the second half, went to the locker to receive four stitches, and returned to bold his team together when Italy closed within one point, 48-47, seven minutes into the second half.

He grabbed a defensive rebound and scored on the next drive, then had a steal and a defensive rebound, feeding centre Stojan Frankovic for a dunk that made it a

Syria's Al Jala' arrive today to play Kingdom's women's national basketball team

AMMAN — Syrian women's basketball champions Al Jala' Sunday arrive in Amman on a week-long visit to the Kingdom where they will play four matches against Jordan's national women's team.

The matches are intended to put the finishing touches on the Kingdom's team's preparations for the upcoming Asian Basketball Championship which will be held in Shizuoka, Japan July 23-30.

Al Jala' lineup includes five players on the Syrian national team including Al Yarmouk club's powerful centre Edo Mardikian. Other national team players include Karin and Miriam Abdulnour, Karla Maghamez, Dina Abdul Samad and Joel Abboushi.

Al Jala' have a 3-0 record over Jordanian teams. They beat Jordan's 1994 champions Al Jazirah twice in Aleppo early last year and again in July '94 when they finished second behind Lebanon's Homentmen in Al Jazirah's five-team regional championship.

Jordan's national team has been practising since January when the Jordan Basketball Federation (JBF) announced the regrouping of the women's team after a 12-year absence from the basketball scene.

The team is coached by Fadi Sabbah and includes: Rana Hussein, Tala Maalej, Jumana Saiti, Hala Muheisen, Suhair Makusi, Andeera Qassabieh, Tetiana Qardan, Hind Ghouri, Sirsa Naghaway, Dima Shaded, Zein Sha'ha'a, Rania Al Dajani, Jihon Abdulnour is also set to join the team on Monday after taking leave from her work in Beirut.

Becker survives early scare to reach last 16

LONDON (R) — Three-times champion Boris Becker recovered from a shaky start to overcome Dutchman Jan Siemerink 2-6, 6-2, 6-2, 6-4 and clinch a place in the last 16 of the men's singles at Wimbledon on Saturday.

The 27-year-old German, bidding to become only the second man in the tournament's 118-year history to win singles championships 10 years apart, finally proved too strong for the 25-year-old left-hander who broke the German's service twice in the opening set but was too often beaten by Becker's powerful and accurately hit ground strokes as the match progressed.

Becker, who first won this title as an unseeded 17-year-old in 1985, would match the record of American Bill Tilden, the only man to date to win titles 10 years apart in 1920 and 1930, if he won the crown for a fourth time next week.

But in the early stages it looked as though the third seed would have his work cut out winning his way into the fourth round.

Siemerink broke Becker's service in the fourth and eighth games of the opening set which he won 6-2 in 42 minutes. The opening game took 14 minutes and included 12 deuces before the Dutchman won it on his ninth game point.

But Becker steadied himself after that poor start. He broke back immediately at the start of the second set before rushing into a 5-1 lead and did not lose another service game in the match.

Although he served only seven aces in the centre court sunshine, two of those came on second serves which left his opponent floundering as the German rediscovered his touch in the later stages.

Becker broke Siemerink for a 5-4 lead in the fourth set and in the 10th game the Dutchman held his head in despair after misjudging a bounce which gave Becker match point.

The German duly wrapped up proceedings with a sliced volley at the net after a workmanlike, rather than spectacular two hours and 18 minutes.

American seeds Lindsay Davenport and Mary Joe Fernandez lined up for a fourth-round clash in the women's singles.

Seventh seed Davenport beat German Christina Singer 6-7, 6-3, 6-2, while 13th seed Fernandez, her best friend on the circuit, brushed aside Miriam Oremans of the Netherlands 6-1, 6-2.

Davenport conceded it would be difficult playing against Fernandez, beaten finalist at last year's French Open and a semifinalist in all the other Grand Slam events in recent years.

"It's definitely going to be weird because she is like a sister to me. One of us will reach the quarters and it's going to be me," she said.

Davenport, 19 and one of the giants of the women's tour at 1.89 metres, struggled with her serve against Singer in a first set in which she squandered four set points.

Two came at 5-4 and she had two more in the tie-break before the 26-year-old German, who played with one ankle in a brace and the other taped, took it 10-8 on her second set point.

But the bulky Davenport's greater strength took over at that point and Singer wilted under the pressure.

"I'm never going to be a Steffi Graf or a Gabriela Sabatini," she said when asked about her size. "I may not be that quick either but once I get moving I've got a fair bit of speed and anticipation."

Her victory took her just under two hours. Fernandez, once ranked as high as fourth in the world, needed less than an hour to beat the hapless Oremans.

Two unseeded players reached the last 16, Marianne De Swardt of South Africa beat Yone Kamio of Japan 6-4, 6-4 and Australian Nicole Bradke defeated Angelica Gavaldon of Mexico 6-2, 6-4.

Frenchman Cedric Pioline, who beat 1993 Wimbledon runner-up Jim Courier in the second round, overcame German qualifier Patrick Baur 6-4, 6-4, 6-3.

Big servers revel in Wimbledon heatwave

LONDON (AFP) — Goran Ivanisevic, Greg Rusedski and Todd Martin, three of the biggest servers in tennis, blasted their way into the last sixteen of the men's singles at Wimbledon on Friday.

With the continuing heatwave making the famous grass courts at the All England Club play faster and faster, all three made a mockery of the new less-pressurised balls which are being used at the Championships for the first time and which are supposed to slow down matches.

Ivanisevic, twice a finalist but determined to go one step further this year, served down his 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 centre-court defeat of Arnaud Boetsch leaving the Frenchman shell-shocked.

"It was just boom, boom, boom. Even on his second serve you can't see anything," said the 26-year-old Boetsch after his humiliating 84 minute loss.

"It was great to be on centre-court but I maybe hit just ten balls in the whole match. What can I say?"

The fourth-seeded Ivanisevic, who served 209 aces on his way to the 1992 final against Andre Agassi, admitted: "I always serve good on this court and this year the balls are flying with the heat. I'm not scared of playing anyone. But I'd rather hit just one ace rather than 209 aces, and win this tournament."

Ivanisevic now faces 14th seed Todd Martin, a semifinalist twelve months ago. Martin, a 6ft 6in (1m98) American, came back after trailing by two sets in one of the most dramatic comebacks in tennis history, losing to Andre Agassi 6-3, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2, 6-4. There were scenes of jubilation on court one when Britain's Canadian-born player Greg Rusedski, reputed to have the world's biggest serve, came storming back to put off Olivier Delaître of France — 6-7 (6-8), 6-4, 6-4, 7-6 (7/3), 6-4.

Sampiras, bidding for his third consecutive singles crown, recovered from a shaky start to beat fellow-American Jared Palmer 4-6, 6-4, 6-1, 6-2.

In other third-round matches, Japan's number-one player Shuzo Matsuoka clawed his way back to win a gruelling five-set marathon against last weekend's Nottingham champion Javier Frana of Argentina.

Frana, who complained several times about the behaviour and noise of a predominantly Japanese crowd packed around court thirteen — one of the outside show courts — crashed 7-6 (7/3), 3-6, 6-7 (6/8), 7-6 (7/4), 6-3.

Matsuoka's next opponent will be American Michael Joyce who defeated Britain's home-grown hope Chris Wilkinson 5-7, 6-4, 7-6 (7/3), 6-4.

American baseline Aaron Krickstein had to go the full distance to outlast stubborn Spaniard Thomas Carbonell. He scored a 6-7 (2/7), 7-5, 5-7, 6-3, 6-2 win and now faces Yevgeny Kafelnikov who defeated fellow-Russian Alexander Volkov in straight-sets.

Japanese hopes in the women's singles took a blow when 15th seed Naoko Sawamatsu who has twice reached the fourth round in five previous visits, was beaten in straight-sets in the third round by qualifier Petra Kamstra.

The 210th-ranked Dutch player scored a 6-1, 7-6 (7/5) win.

Yayuk Basuki of Indonesia surged back after a hesitant start to reach the fourth round for the fourth consecutive year by beating Eastbourne champion Nathalie Tauziar of France.

Tauziar, who put out fifth-seeded compatriot Mary Pierce in the previous round, went down 7-6 (7/4), 3-6, 4-6.

Spain's top favourite, second-seed Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario and defending champion Conchita Martinez, both took another step towards a probable semi-final showdown.

Sanchez-Vicario, playing possibly the best grass-court tennis of her career defeated 1990 finalist Zina Garrison-Jackson in straight-sets.

The 31-year-old American, who is appearing at the Championships for the last time, won only five games. Martinez, who had lost only five of 44 matches this season and who has been beaten only once — by Steffi Graf in the French Open semi-finals — in her last five tournaments, defeated Shaun Stafford of the United States 6-1, 6-1.

Navratilova returns for 23rd time

WIMBLEDON (AP) — Martina Navratilova received a standing ovation from the centre court crowd Friday when she made her 23rd appearance in a row at Wimbledon.

Now retired as a singles player, the nine-time Wimbledon finalist had planned to am for an eighth women's doubles title but her partner, Steffi Graf, pulled out to avoid aggravating injuries.

But Navratilova, who first played in 1973 as a 16-year-old, teamed up with Jonathan Stark in a first-round mixed doubles match. They downed fellow Americans Matt Lucena and Tami Whittinger-Jones, 6-4, 7-6 (7-1).

Big money on Andre: after five days of Wimbledon, the money's pouring in on Andre Agassi to win his second title.

even though Petr Sampras remains favoured to win his third in a row.

According to bookmakers Ladbrokes, Sampras remains the 4-5 favourite but the odds on Agassi, who won the title in 1992 and has breezed through his two early matches without dropping a set, have shortened from 5-1 to 2-1.

Three-time titlist Boris Becker remains third favourite and his odds haven't changed at 6-1, while Goran Ivanisevic, runner up in '92 and last year, started at 9-1 but now is 8-1.

Another big mover in the odds list is Petr Korda of the Czech republic. The left-hander, who was 500-1 before the tournament started, is a 33-1 shot after beating fifth seed Michael Chang in straight sets in the second round Tuesday.

Five-time titlist Steffi Graf remains the 1-2 favourite to win the women's tournament with defending titlist Conchita Martinez second at 7-2.

Don't copy Andre: Andre Agassi would be touted off court if he tried to play at any of the stuffy English clubs, according to tennis coach Alan Jones.

"It is not because of the way he plays, but what he wears," said Jones, long time coach of Britain's Jo Durie. "Andre Agassi, the most marketable and charismatic figure in the game, would not be allowed to play at virtually any club in the land," Jones said in a criticism of the British attitude to the game.

"The kids want to put on the same clothes as him. But they would be kicked off court if they wore what he did when he won the Australian Open."

At several tournaments this year, Agassi wore black socks and shoes and patterned shorts. At Wimbledon, players are made to wear predominantly white and Agassi complies, even with a white bandana on his head.

"His all-white gear for Wimbledon is exceptional," Jones said. "How are we going to get our kids playing in droves if they can't emulate their hero?"

"The archaic attitude of our clubs is a huge problem and unless they change their ways towards children, we are going to have problems."

"We simply aren't getting enough youngsters into the game. They could play the game nude as long as they wear the right shoes so they don't scuff up the court."

Signing off: Michael Chang, recent finalist at the French Open clocked in and our Wimbledon in double quick time when he was beaten in straight-sets in the second-round by Czech Petr Korda. But the fourth-seeded Chinese-American won an army of new fans after his morning practice session. He stayed behind on the Aorangi Park Court for a full 20 minutes until every autograph hunter had been satisfied.

Opening lead: King of ♠. Make life as easy as possible for partner. We've said that often, but cannot repeat it enough. That's the secret to winning defense.

West's jump to two spades was, by partnership agreement, intermediate, showing a good suit and the equivalent of an opening bid. Afraid that a bid of three hearts would sound competitive, North chose instead to jump to game, which ended the auction.

West cashed the king and ace of spades, then continued with the queen. East discarded a diamond, declarer ruffed and led a low trump. When West's ace appeared, South claimed the rest of the tricks.

The correct defense is easy to spot from the West seat. South surely must have the ace and king of clubs and king of diamonds to open the bidding, so the only hope of setting the contract lay in a trump promotion. To make that clear to partner, West should have led a low spade to the third trick.

As long as East takes care to ruff the trick with the right of hearts, the contract must go down to defeat. Declarer can overruff with the queen and lead a trump, but when in with the ace of hearts, West simply reverts to a spade and, whether declarer ruffs high or low in dummy, East must score the jack of hearts on partner's for the setting trick.

NBA locks out players

NEW YORK (R) — The National Basketball Association, previously untainted by the labour woes that have blighted other team sports, began its first work stoppage at midnight on Friday when the owners locked out the players.

The lockout began when the "no-strike, no-lockout" agreement struck in October expired. Commissioner David Stern said on Friday that the owners had "no other option."

"Recent events left the owners no other option because the players repudiated a hard-fought agreement containing compromises and difficult choices by both sides," Stern said.

"It's a shame that the success we and our players have enjoyed as a result of working together is now in jeopardy."

The lockout coincides with expiration of the no-strike, no-lockout pledge made by both sides last October that allowed the 1994-95 season to be played without interruption. The last collective bargaining agreement expired exactly a year ago.

The owners last week unanimously approved an agreement worked out between the league and the Players' Association. But player representatives postponed their votes on the deal and a small group of prominent players have taken steps to decertify the union and nullify the recent negotiations.

"The deal reached last week was the product of 18 months of hard-fought good faith bargaining," said NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik, a member of the negotiating team.

"If that deal is no longer acceptable to the players, then we are prepared to keep negotiating."

With no bargaining sessions scheduled for Friday, however, the NBA appears headed for the same type of labour problems that plagued baseball and hockey last year.

The NBA has prospered and avoided any serious labour strife since Stern became commissioner in 1984.

The lockout cancels payments to players for the 1995-96 season and terminates all benefits. It also prohibits negotiations and contract signings between teams and players.

All summer leagues, tryout and team-sponsored off-season games will be cancelled and team training facilities will be shut down, the league said.

Arabi, Faisali clash in Jordan Cup

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Al Arabi Sunday take on the country's top soccer team, Al Faisali, in the final round of the 16th Jordan Cup — the second most important of the Kingdom's soccer competitions.

Al Faisali are aiming for a fourth consecutive and a record 9th Jordan Cup title, while Al Arabi have a modest record and were the winners in 1986.

Al Faisali eliminated Al Jazireh and Al Zarqa while Al Arabi upset newcomers Knifousm and Al Qozazi on their way to the final round.

The other teams in the final round are Al Hussein and Al Ramtha.

Al Hussein, who clinched their first major title when they won the 1994 Federation Shield, had an easy path to final round eliminating lowly Al Yarmouk and Sahab.

Al Ramtha also easily qualified, overcoming Al Baqaa and Thar-Ras. Al Ramtha were the Jordan Cup finalists in the last two years and the titleholders in 1990 and 1991.

Twenty-eight teams from the First Division and the Premier League entered the Jordan Cup. The most surprising result was Premier League champions Al Wihdat's elimination by Al Baqaa.

Schedule of Jordan Cup final round matches

Hill wins pole for French Grand Prix

MAGNY COURS, France (AFP) — Damon Hill was celebrating a pole position start in the French Grand Prix on Saturday, but world champion Michael Schumacher was left with a tyre shortage which jeopardises his race on Sunday.

Hill, on provisional pole after Friday's first qualifying, saw the grizzled position change hands four times in the second session, before returning to the Williams Renault driver for good with a time of 1 min 17.225sec.

Schumacher, top of the current drivers' championship with a seven-point lead over Hill, was twice in pole position before finally being forced to settle for second fastest in 1:17.512.

But the German was clearly upset at events earlier in the weekend which are certain to slow him down on Sunday.

Over-zealous Goodyear technicians punctured two sets of Schumacher's tyres on Friday while taking tyre temperatures — reducing him to five sets for the entire weekend.

"We've got big problems," said Schumacher. "We don't have enough tyres for the race — we can't run the old tyres because it would be a safety risk. My car would be unsafe if I had to use those other tyres. We all know what happens when a tyre explodes."

Benetton asked the ruling International Automobile Federation for permission to use an extra two sets — but the FIA refused to bend the rules.

Benetton were appealing that decision on Saturday, but a u-turn by officials here looked unlikely.

Schumacher said: "I'm sure that it's being discussed at the moment. But now is not the time to make a stupid comment."

Schumacher's press manager, Heiner Buchinger, later tried to play down the drama.

"We are negotiating at the moment," he told AFP, "but I don't think there's much chance that the FIA are going to change their mind."

Indurain aims for history at Tour de France

SAINT-BRIEUC, France (AP) — Five in succession. It has never been done. Still, Miguel Indurain is favoured to rewrite the 92-year-old history of the Tour de France over the next three weeks.

Standing in the way of the supreme cyclist of the 1990s is Tony Rominger, an aging Swiss who is reaching peak form at 34, and local hero Laurent Jalabert, who has been transformed into an all-round star since he crashed out of last year's tour.

The prologue will give a first indication on who's hot and who's not, especially since it will be run on an undulating 7.3-kilometre, (4.5-mile) loop through this Brittany resort town.

"The prologue will be particularly tough. It'll be a test for everyone," Indurain said.

But for the Spaniard, it'll be a 23-day, 3,635-kilometre (2,254-mile) test to see whether he can join Belgian Eddy Merckx and Frenchmen Jacques Anquetil and Bernard Hinault as five-time winners.

What sets Indurain apart, is that he can do it in five consecutive years.

"The fifth tour doesn't worry me. I'm just centering on winning this one," Indurain said Friday. And his preparation has been flawless, including victories in two preparatory one-week races that cover portions of this year's tour.

"I'm in excellent form," he said. Considering he has won by ever-bigger margins over the past four years, some might think the result is a foregone conclusion.

However, for the first time in years, opposition looks real tough.

"It'll be a lot harder for Miguel, because there are a lot of guys in great shape," Rominger said.

Including himself, Rominger, currently No. 1 in the world rankings, overwhelmed opposition during the Giro last month and already took Indurain's one-hour time trial world record last fall. On top of this, he claims to feel no pressure.

"I'm already satisfied with my year. I've won the Giro," the Swiss said. But after finishing second in 1993 and abandoning last year's race after falling ill, the "yellow jersey" going to the tour winner is one of the few things still missing. And at his age, he knows he will not get to many more chances.

The Parisians will be looking for Jalabert in yellow during the concluding laps on the Champs Élysées when what's left of the 199-strong starting field hits Paris on July 23.

France has not had a champion since Hinault won his last of five tours in 1985 and Jalabert has given them hope.

Currently third in the world rankings, just below Indurain, he has won one-day classics and climbed on some of the toughest mountains along with the best.

It is a far cry from last year, when he crashed horribly during the opening sprint finish of the tour, losing several teeth and needing reconstructive surgery on his face.

He missed the rest of the year, but it brought him back stronger and better this season.

Other outsiders include Evgeni Berzin, who finished second in the Giro. The Russian has been peaking towards his best form over the past weeks, as has Italy's star mountain climber Marco Pantani.

American Lance Armstrong is not among the favourites and he has set himself less lofty goals too — finishing is paramount.

His first two tours finished early, with pre-planned desertions halfway through the race.

After winning the Tour D'opont at home, he is reaching cycling maturity at 23.

"I have never done three weeks. I wouldn't mind being close to the top 10 in the final standings," he said.

After Saturday's opening, the next test comes on Tuesday when a 67-kilometre (41.6-mile) team time trial is set.

July 9 could be decisive for many with the first individual time trial over 54 kilometres of hilly terrain in Belgium. Over the past years, Indurain each time opened a big gap, and controlled the race from that point.

Climbers get their chance after that, with five mountain stages in the Alps and Pyrenees.

If things are still not settled by July 22, a final time trial should.

The next day the Tour will be history and Indurain may have his share of it.

Russian cabinet easily wins no-confidence vote

MOSCOW (Agencies) — The Russian government survived a no-confidence vote in parliament on Saturday after President Boris Yeltsin sacrificed three top hardline members of the cabinet.

Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin emerged strengthened from the vote, which could have forced Mr. Yeltsin to choose between dismissing the government or dissolving parliament, and said he wanted to cooperate with the deputies rather than fight them.

"The confrontation between the executive power and the legislature has been resolved," he told reporters. "Now it is time to work and not to quarrel," he said, calling for better cooperation with the cabinet.

A total of 193 deputies supported the no-confidence motion in the State Duma lower house of parliament, short of the 226 required for the vote to pass.

On June 21, 341 deputies had supported a non-binding no-confidence vote but some appeared by Mr. Yeltsin's Kremlin purge ahead of the second, binding vote.

"The Duma proved to be more responsible than many people have thought," Vyacheslav Nikonov, a moderate deputy, said.

The Duma initiated the vote in anger at a bloody raid by Chechen gunmen last month on the southern Russian town of Budennovsk in which at least 121 people were killed and more than 1,000 held hostage for six days.

If Saturday's vote had passed, Mr. Yeltsin would have been forced under the constitution to sack the government or dissolve parliament and call an election. The next election is currently scheduled for December.

Mr. Yeltsin had made clear he would opt to dissolve the Duma rather than dismiss the government and some deputies called Saturday's vote "a gesture of self-preservation."

In a clear attempt to avoid a head-on collision with parliament, Mr. Yeltsin on Friday accepted the resignations of three senior ministers widely blamed for the Budennovsk drama and for Russia's bloody campaign in the rebel region of Chechnya.

They were Interior Minister Viktor Yerin, Nationalities Minister Nikolai Yegorov, federal security service chief Sergei Stepashin. Mr. Yeltsin also sacked Yevgeny Kuznetsov, governor of the Stavropol region which includes Budennovsk.

The president ignored calls to sack his long-time ally, Defence Minister Pavel Grachev, who was the top of the list of ministers who deputies wanted sacked and who had offered to resign on Thursday.

Mr. Grachev sided with Mr. Yeltsin during a bloody hardliners' revolt in Moscow in October 1993.

Mr. Chernomyrdin was not the main target of the no-confidence motion. He has won wide public backing by negotiating an end to the Budennovsk hostage crisis and clearing the way for new peace talks in Chechnya.

The staunchest opponents of Mr. Yeltsin and Mr. Chernomyrdin, such as the communists and ultra-nationalists of Vladimir Zhirinovskiy, made clear they would continue trying to topple the government.

"Those who rule Russia now have inflicted more harm to it than (Nazi leader Adolf) Hitler and Napoleon (French emperor who invaded Russia in 1812)," Mr. Zhirinovskiy said during a brief debate. "They are worse, more insidious and terrible."

"We do not trust this government... its policy is ruinous," said communist leader Gennady Zyuganov.

Peace talks look up

Russian and Chechen negotiators meeting in Grozny said Saturday that a partial breakthrough in their peace talks looked likely by the evening.

Debate in the morning on political issues had been "the most successful so far," said Sador Meszaros, head of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) mission, which is sponsoring the talks.

Mr. Meszaros said there was "hope for an agreement this evening," and Russian mediator Arkadi Volsky echoed the optimism.

Separatist negotiator Usman Imaev said Chechen chief of staff Aslan Maskhadov had left Grozny "for consultations" and should return with "good news for this evening."

Mr. Imaev would not say whether Mr. Maskhadov would be seeking fugitive rebel president Dzhokhar Dudayev — who is rumoured to be staying too far away for a return trip of just a few hours.

None of the peace talks delegates would say what issues were likely to be resolved Saturday, but the main political issue of recent days has been the question of elections, which Moscow would like to see held in November.

Other main questions include the setting up of an interim government ahead of elections, what type of elections — legislative or presidential — and whether Mr. Dudayev can stand.

The peace talks began June 18, and have so far succeeded only in achieving a poorly observed ceasefire.

On Thursday, Mr. Volsky said a further round of peace talks could involve a face-to-face meeting between Mr. Chernomyrdin and Mr. Dudayev.

Ekeus holds intense talks with Rashid

BAGHDAD (Agencies) — A U.N. team seeking answers to the last questions about banned Iraqi military programmes spent all of Saturday in intensive talks that could help determine the future of economic sanctions.

A U.N. official said Rolf Ekeus, head of the U.N. programme to eliminate the Iraqi weapons, met in the morning with General Amir Mohammad Rashid, former head of the Military Industrialisation Organisation.

Meetings of experts from both sides continued through the afternoon and evening.

Mr. Ekeus was scheduled to meet Gen. Rashid and Deputy Prime Minister Tareq Aziz on Sunday for final talks before leaving en route to New York to report his findings to the U.N. Security Council, the official said.

Details of the talks, thought to centre on a missing 17 tonnes of "growth media" that could have been used to make biological weapons, were described as too sensitive to be discussed before reporting in New York.

Mr. Ekeus, head of the U.N. Special Commission on Disarming Iraq (UNSCOM), met Gen. Rashid, the newly-appointed oil minister and main Iraqi negotiator on disarmament also on Friday.

His six-member U.N. delegation included three experts in biological weapons was expected to stay three days, after flying in from UNSCOM's rear base in Manama. It is the second Ekeus visit to Baghdad in the last month.

Iraq said Sunday it would clear up international concerns about its germ warfare potential if the United Nations gave Baghdad a clean bill of health on other weapons programmes.

After his last visit to Baghdad at the end of May, Mr. Ekeus told the Security Council that Iraq's failure to disclose germ warfare details was the only significant obstacle to lifting the oil embargo.

Gen. Rashid has been the main negotiator with UNSCOM as the head of the Military Industrialisation Organisation, which was tasked with converting the country's military industry to civilian uses after the Gulf war.

He was named to the post of oil minister on Friday, replacing Safaa Jawad, who became advisor to President Saddam Hussein's office. The official news agency INA gave no explanation for the move.

The Military Industrialisation Organisation is directly responsible to President Saddam. Gen. Hussein Kamal Hassan, the president's son-in-law and industry minister, was named as its new director on Friday.

Mr. Ekeus, a former Swedish Diplomat, said before arriving he wanted Iraq to account for the "growth media" Iraq said its cooperation depended on the United Nations declaring investigations into other weapons programmes permanently closed and guaranteeing to lift the ban on oil exports.

With splits inside the U.N. Security Council over terms for easing sanctions, Iraq hopes the U.S. determination to keep sanctions would be overcome by the more sympathetic view of France, Russia and China.

The United States has linked a lifting of the sanctions, which have blocked Iraq's oil exports and devastated its economy, to Iraqi behaviour in a wide range of areas beyond the military programmes, including its human rights record.

Russia and France have both suggested linking an easing of the ban on oil exports to Mr. Ekeus reporting Iraq has complied with all the arms control demands, including biological weapons.

Dutch diocese warns against pilgrimages to 'weeping Madonna'

BRUNSSUM, Netherlands (AP) — A local retiree claims his statue of the Virgin Mary wept tears of blood, but speaking to the same newspaper, the Roman Catholic diocese Friday discouraged potential pilgrims. Jan Coumans, who owns the 30-centimetre (12-inch) statue, has put it on his doorstep in this southern Roman Catholic area so visitors can get a better look. "The diocese doesn't want to ban believers from visiting the concerned Madonna statue. But it in no way wants to call people to go," the diocese said in a statement. "In fact, the diocese strongly advises not to go."

A picture of the statue with a red discoloration down the left side of its face appeared on the front page of Friday's national daily Algemeen Dagblad. Red liquid was first spotted Tuesday on the statue of Our Sacred Lady of Fatima, according to the paper. The Dutch press dubbed it the "weeping Madonna."

"I'm not a believer, but when I saw the miracle happen with my own eyes I felt to me knees," Gerard Stevens, who lives nearby, was quoted as telling the newspaper. "I dipped my finger in the blood," he said, "and I know for sure that it was real."

Mr. Coumans, 63, said his wife, 67, also was initially sceptical. "At first, Gerda didn't want to believe it, but when she saw the blood she ran outside in panic."

"Why would Maria perform wonders to Italy and not here?" Gerda was quoted as saying. "She's shedding tears of blood over the misery and the rising unbelief in the world."

The PLO has demanded a reasonable for prisoner release as part of the deal.

For Mr. Arafat and Mr. Peres failed to reach an agreement in more than eight hours of talks which broke up at dawn Sunday, see separate story.

American fined $4,000 for plunging over Niagara Falls

TORONTO (R) — Canadian courts fined an American daredevil 6,000 Canadian dollars ($4,000) Friday for plunging over the Niagara Falls with a woman in an air-tight fiberglass capsule.

Ontario officials said. Court officials said 33-year Steven Trotter of Fort Lauderdale, Florida pleaded guilty to a charge of stunting under the Niagara Parks Act. Trotter is still being held by Canadian immigration authorities in Thorold, Ontario near the popular honeymoon spot where he and his friend Lori Martin of Atlanta, Georgia, hurtled to safety on June 18.

Canadian immigration officials said he will appear at a hearing Saturday to determine whether he has violated Canadian law by lying about his reasons for visiting Canada when he crossed the border.

Depending on the outcome of the hearing Mr. Martin could be asked to leave Canada within 30 days, banned from visiting for one year or deported and banned from Canada for life. The two were treated for shock, bumps and bruises.

Half Taiwan pupils get physical punishment

TAIPEI (R) — Half of Taiwan's junior-high school students say they are physically punished by their teachers in school, a private foundation said Saturday. Of the 827 students polled across the island, 50.4 per cent said they had been physically punished by teachers recently, said the survey by the Formosa Foundation for Education and Culture.

There are 1.2 million junior-high-school students, aged between 13 and 15, in Taiwan, according to official data. "The top three punishments are beating the hand, running around the playground and hitting the bottom," an official at the foundation said by telephone. Among the punished, 48.7 per cent said they were punished for bad academic results or failing to answer questions, she said. The ancient Chinese idiom "good teachers come from strict teachers" has been used to justify Taiwan teachers punishing their students, but there have been calls to end physical punishments in recent years and some teachers have been punished for beating students.

Abu Zeid's colleague files appeal

CAIRO (Agencies) — A colleague of Nasr Hamed Abu Zeid, a university professor ruled a heretic and ordered separated from his wife, raised an appeal to suspend execution of the sentence, legal sources said Saturday.

The Court for Emergency Matters will examine on Thursday the appeal filed by Ahmad Hussein Al Ahwani, a science professor at Cairo University.

On July 15, in an unprecedented ruling, an appeals court judged Dr. Abu Zeid, an Arabic professor, a heretic and ordered him separated from his wife on the grounds that a Muslim woman cannot be married to an apostate.

The court ruled that Dr. Abu Zeid's writings attacked Islam and denied the teachings of the Koran.

Dr. Ahwani's appeal, if won, would suspend the separation of the couple until an appeal against the judgement is considered.

Dr. Ahwani pointed out in his appeal that Dr. Abu Zeid had pronounced the oath of Islamic faith in a public statement published in a government newspaper after the judgement.

Meanwhile, the public prosecutor's office announced on Saturday it would raise an appeal against the judgement before the Supreme Court by the end of next week, after studying the ruling.

Dr. Abu Zeid also intends to appeal the judgement before the Supreme Court.

Jailed for poster

A Cairo court on Saturday sentenced a cinema owner to three months in jail with hard labour for displaying a film poster that showed an actress in a low-cut dress.

The court fined Badaa Sobhy, who is also a film producer, five hundred pounds ($147) for offending public morals.

The poster is for a 1973 production called "Layali Lan Taoud" (unrepeatable nights) starring renowned femme fatale Nahed Sherif.

Sheikh Yousef Al Badri, a former member of parliament turned Islamist preacher, took Mr. Sobhy to court along with nine Muslim fundamentalist lawyers.

The film censor's office had given Mr. Sobhy permission in 1973 to show the film and told him he could display the poster only if he covered Ms. Sherif's cleavage, the plaintiffs said.

Suspected informer killed in south Egypt

ASSIUT (R) — Suspected Muslim militants shot dead a farmer they believed was a police informer as he returned home from the fields in southern Egypt, security sources said on Saturday. They said two gunmen opened fire on Salah Nageh Tadros on Friday night in the village of Greis in Minya province, about 240 kilometres south of Cairo. The men are allegedly members of the militant Al Gamaa Al Islamiyah, which has been fighting a low-level guerrilla war against police in southern Egypt for more than three years in a bid to destabilise the Egyptian government and set up a strict Islamic state. The assailants believed Tadros had helped police with their investigations into militant violence in Minya province, the focus of most police-militant clashes in the past few months. More than 780 people have been killed in political violence in Egypt since militants launched their campaign in 1992.

Lebanon gets back stolen statues

BEIRUT (R) — Lebanon recovered four ancient Phoenician marble statues after they were smuggled out of the country during the civil war and sold in Switzerland. The four sons of Ashmoun, the Phoenician god of health, were brought back home on Friday evening after intensive negotiations between Lebanese and Swiss judicial authorities. "We knew about the statues through a Swiss archaeologist who notified us after recognising them at a Swiss gallery," former Lebanese Ambassador in Switzerland Fouad Al Turk, who led the negotiations, told reporters at Beirut airport. He said the statues, dating to the second millennium B.C., were transferred from Ashmoun temple in the coastal city of Sidon during Lebanon's 1975-1990 civil war to the city of Byblos. In 1982, they were smuggled to Belgium and then sold to a Swiss woman. "Thank God we were able to bring back the statues safely to Lebanon as their historical and archaeological value is priceless," Mr. Turk said.

Funeral service held for Daoud Tawil

PARIS (AP) — Government representatives, ambassadors, and family friends paid their last respects Friday to Daoud Tawil, a prominent banker from the West Bank who was also Yasser Arafat's father-in-law. Tawil, who lived in Paris for many years, died Monday after a long, undisclosed illness. Suha Arafat, supported by body guards and wearing sunglasses, bled tears as she tossed a single pink rose into her father's grave at the Montparnasse cemetery. In an interview published earlier this week, she expressed the hope that her father would live long enough to witness the birth of her first child. Mrs. Arafat is expected to deliver next month. Funeral services at the Saint-Stephane church drew many prominent political figures, including the Palestine Liberation Organisation chief's cabinet head, Ramzi Khoury. According to the French news agency Agence-France Presse, Mr. Arafat was unable to attend the funeral. AFP also reported the presence of the former Israeli governor of Naplouse, Tawil's home city, a long-time family friend. Former French President Francois Mitterrand was represented by his son, Jean-Christophe. Ambassadors from several Arab countries also reportedly attended.

Judge delays trial of Lebanese MP

BEIRUT (R) — A Lebanese court Saturday postponed the trial of a member of parliament (MP) charged for trafficking drugs. Judicial sources said. They said the judge decided to delay until July 29 the trial of Yahia Shamas, due to the absence of several members of the tribunal council and of Mr. Shamas himself who is being treated for cardiac problems at a Beirut hospital. Shamas, a Muslim deputy for the Bekaa Valley which was a centre for the multi-million-dollar illegal trade during Lebanon's 1975-1990 civil war, was charged last March with possession, processing, smuggling and dealing in drugs. He was arrested on drug charges last November after parliament lifted his immunity. If convicted, Mr. Shamas could be sentenced to up to seven years in prison.

Gore leaves Russia

MOSCOW (Agencies) — U.S. Vice-President Al Gore left Moscow on Saturday after two days of talks with Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin on economic cooperation, ITAR-TASS News Agency said.

Mr. Gore took part in the meeting of a U.S.-Russian commission on economic and technological cooperation, which he co-chairs with Mr. Chernomyrdin.

The most important agreement sealed during the meeting held on Thursday and Friday was a $15 billion deal to develop oil and gas fields off Russia's far eastern island of Sakhalin.

This project involves U.S. Exxon Corp and Japan's Sodeco (Sakhalin Oil Development Company).

The Gore-Chernomyrdin talks, taking place amid right security due to Russia's conflict with Chechen separatists, coincided with the docking of the U.S. space shuttle Atlantis with the Russian orbital station Mir.

The shuttle was carrying five U.S. astronauts and two Russian cosmonauts on the first of several planned joint missions that could lead to the establishment of an international space station.

The meeting ended just a day before Mr. Chernomyrdin's government survived a vote of no-confidence in parliament on Saturday.

TABS said 21 documents have been signed during the meeting. Gore also met President Boris Yeltsin during his stay.

Mr. Gore and Chernomyrdin failed to settle a dispute over nuclear sales to Iran but took some steam out of a row over a U.S.-Russian uranium deal.

However, the U.S. State Department said Friday, Russia met U.S. concerns about Russian conventional arms sales to Iran during Mr. Gore's talks in Moscow.

At a U.S.-Russian summit in September 1994 in Washington, Mr. Yeltsin pledged not to sell conventional weapons to Iran once existing contracts were totally honoured.

Until now, the United States have vainly called Russia to provide details of the contracts — estimated to be worth several billion dollars and to include submarines and tanks — to verify Mr. Yeltsin's promise.

State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said Mr. Chernomyrdin provided Mr. Gore with information on "the existing flow of arms" to Iran and the duration of the contracts.

"Old contracts will end in a few years," said Mr. Burns, who added that they were not sufficient to alter the military balance in the Middle East.

Syria, Lebanon did not attend multilaterals on water — Jordan

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — A top Jordanian expert on water and the Kingdom's senior negotiator on water-related issues on Saturday corroborated denials from Syria and Lebanon that delegates from those two countries had attended a round of multilateral meetings in Geneva last month.

Munther Haddadin said he had attended the meeting in Geneva on June 28 and only Jordan, the Palestinian National Authority (PNA) and Israel were present in the talks.

"It was an inter-session meeting of the multilateral working group on water" of the Middle East peace process, Dr. Haddadin told the Jordan Times. "I attended the meeting and only Middle East parties present there were Jordan, the Palestinians and Israel," he said.

Dr. Haddadin described the reports carried by Israel's state-run radios that Syrian and Lebanese delegates attended the meeting as "inaccurate."

"This is one of the inaccurate reports that we have been used to hearing from Israeli radio," he said without elaboration.

However, the Jordanian corroboration of the denials from Damascus and Beirut undermined the importance Amman attaches to Syrian and Lebanese participation in talks on regional cooperation as part of the Arab-Israeli peace process.

Syria and Lebanon are staying away from the multilateral talks that tackle water, the environment, refugees, arms control and security and regional economic cooperation saying that their participation would come only after progress is made in the bilateral negotiations with Israel on the basic political conflict.

Being upstream riparians to the River Yarmouk and tributaries to that river, Syria and Lebanon have a major role to play in any arrangements on water sharing and cooperation in enhancing the availability of water to the region's countries.

Their absence from the talks on regional cooperation is seen to be hampering many proposals that have been brought up by participants in the multilateral working group, particularly in the working group on water.

Foreign Minister Abdul Karim Kahariti said last month that Jordan remained highly hopeful that Syria and Lebanon would soon join the effort for regional cooperation.

Rights groups warn of hunger-strikers' health

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (Agencies) — Many of the 4,000 Palestinian prisoners involved in an open-ended hunger-strike aimed at winning their release from Israeli jails are in a critical condition, two human rights groups have said.

The Mandela Institute human rights group and the Al Haq jurists' association warned that the health of prisoners was deteriorating rapidly after 13 days without food and accused Israeli authorities of negligent medical treatment.

In a joint statement, the two groups accused prison officials of withdrawing daily rations of milk, until now accepted by many of the strikers, and of refusing medical treatment unless the protesters agreed to give up their fast.

They also accused the authorities at most jails and military detention centres of denying prisoners the right to be visited by lawyers and of preventing lawyers discussing the strike with clients at other institutions.

The groups said "many ill prisoners, who were initially in serious medical situations before the strike, are now in critical states."

They added that five had been transferred to Ramla prison hospital near Tel Aviv and a sixth had been moved from Shatta prison to Assaf Harufeh hospital in the centre of the country.

"A large number of prisoners participating in the strike suffer daily from the rapid deterioration of their medical conditions," they added.

The two organisations demanded that the authorities give medical treatment to those who required it, allow lawyers to visit prisoners and stop punishing those taking part in the strike.

There was no immediate response from prison officials.

Israel's police and justice ministers, Moshe Shahal and David Libai, met Palestinian Cooperation Minister Nabil Shaath and Justice Minister Freih Abu Midein on Friday to discuss prisoners' releases.

They agreed to hold further talks in the coming days. Mr. Shahal said more than half the 6,500 prisoners would remain in jail for the near future. Israel announced Thursday that hundreds of prisoners will be freed when an accord on extending Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank is reached and hundreds more after elections.

The Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) has demanded a timetable for the release of all inmates to end the hunger strike.

Some 400 prisoners gave up their 13-day-old hunger strike on Friday, Israeli television reported.

Arab women condemn violence, prejudices

BEIRUT (R) — An Arab "court of women" has denounced all kinds of violence against females as public right crimes while it prepared evidence for the United Nations of male violence in the Arab World.

The unprecedented "court," closed on Friday night after three days of deliberations in which it heard testimonies of male abuses by 33 women from 14 Arab countries.

The findings and recommendations of the "court" will be presented to the U.N.-sponsored world women's conference in Beijing next month.

"Violence against women constitutes an aggression against her humanity, her dignity and an infringement on her rights and freedom," the nine-member women court said in a statement.

It said the testimonies provided cutting evidence that tyranny against women in underdeveloped Arab countries resulted from legal male prejudices, paternal and tribal cultures and religious extremism.

Prisoners relaunch strike

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (Agencies) — Palestinian prisoners campaigning for their release from Israeli jails relaunch their hunger-strike Sunday after Israel and the PLO failed to agree on a deal on extending the strike.

Palestinian prisoners in jails in Nabulus, Ramallah and Jenin on the occupied West Bank are to accept the offer and step up their hunger strike by refusing to drink water, the sources said.

The last for freedom, launched two weeks ago, was suspended on Saturday in the hope that PLO leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres would meet a midnight deadline for agreement on spreading Palestinian self-rule across the West Bank.

The PLO has demanded a reasonable for prisoner release as part of the deal.

For Mr. Arafat and Mr. Peres failed to reach an agreement in more than eight hours of talks which broke up at dawn Sunday, see separate story.

The Israeli prison service said only 1,200 prisoners were continuing their fast Sunday out of the 4,000 who joined the hunger-strike campaign.

A spokesman for the Palestinian Mandala Institute, a human rights group, said "Palestinian prisoners demand milk and some eggs on Saturday night, and some are considered as striking a hunger strike."

The prisoners refuse to drink water and have drawn consequences in Israel and the West Bank where temperatures have soared above 40 degrees Celsius.

Israel used to release hundreds of inmates when an amnesty accord is reached and hundreds more after Palestinian elections, but the PLO claims the army released all 6,000 prisoners.

Israel security detainees as well as teachers agreed to a 10-day fast on a West Bank stop withdrawal, the voice of Palestine Radio said.
